Introduction.

In the year 1847, when Samuel Wilberforce, then Bishop of Oxford, was visiting at Nuneham, his attention was called to a manuscript written by the celebrated John Evelyn of Wotton, being a memoir of Margaret Godolphin.

My grandfather, who was great-great-grandson of John Evelyn, entrusted the manuscript to Bishop Wilberforce for publication; and, accordingly, "The Life of Mrs. "Godolphin, by John Evelyn of "Wootton, "Wootton, Esq., now first published and edited by Samuel, "Lord Bishop of Oxford, Chancellor of the most noble order of "the Garter," was given to the public, through the agency of Messrs. Pickering. The book was received with much favour by the public, and went through several editions.
The only matter of regret was that the manuscript was never restored to the Nuneham library.

There is yet another manuscript at Nuneham, which appears to me worthy of notice; namely, "The "Life of the Renowned Dr. Preston,
"Master of Emanuel College in "the University of Cambridge,
"writ by the Reverend Thomas "Ball, Minister of Northampton."
Bishop
Bishop Wilberforce, in his introduction to the "Life of Mrs. Godolphin," says, that "her lot was cast in the darkest age of England's morals; she lived in a court where flourished in their rankest luxuriance all the vice and littleness which the envy of detractors without has ever loved to impute—and at times, thank God, with such utter falsehood to courts in general. In the reign of Charles the Second that revulsion of feeling which affects nations just as it does individuals had plunged into dissipation all ranks, on their escape from the narrow austerities and gloomy sourness of Puritanism."

The "Renowned" Dr. Preston lived lived one hundred years before Mrs. Godolphin, in times which gave birth to that Puritanism to which Bishop Wilberforce refers. The death of the Scottish Queen and the sailing of the Spanish Armada were the stirring events which occupied the thoughts of Englishmen at the period of Preston's birth.

At the time of Elizabeth's accession to the throne, Rome claimed the allegiance of three-fourths of her subjects; but, in the few years that followed, England became firmly Protestant. Under Henry the Eighth the Romish priests were sensual and ignorant; the Protestant clergy appointed in the reign of Edward the Sixth were almost almost worse; the days of Hooker and Herbert, however, marked a disappearance of the grosser scandals amongst ministers of religion. Elizabeth's early policy was to leave matters alone, and to trust to time to work out the ecclesiastical reforms which she favoured; but the persecuting energy that was developed towards the end of her reign effectually alienated that Romish remnant, which at one time appeared to be becoming reconciled to the national Church.

The accession of James the First raised the hopes of the Roman party, and apparently with good foundation, for at the commencement of his reign the persecutions were relaxed; the truce, however, was was of short duration. The king himself was too narrow-minded to take a statesman-like view of either civil or religious affairs, and his natural abilities, which were great, were cramped in their nature. His conceits and humours had, at times, a certain pleasant savour about them, as is somewhat illustrated in the following pages; but he was entirely wanting in that strength of character which, emboldened by its own conscious rectitude and by a charitable respect for a like rectitude in others, could alone have given him any hold on the affections of the people over whom he was called upon to reign.

A new conception of social equality (a matter of religion amongst the the Puritans) was gradually displacing the overweening sense of social distinction which had characterized former history. The jealousy with which any indication of this new temper was met by those in authority, and the unwise means taken to repress it, were amongst the chief causes of the troubles that followed. Into a consideration of those troubles it is needless now to enter; suffice it to say that the excesses to which they led on the one side were followed by a natural rebound on the other.

In such trying times were Doctor Preston's lines cast. Of such times our memoir is highly illustrative. Fortunate is it for us that we are able to look upon the scenes here here depicted merely as matters of curiosity and wonder.

I have followed the example of the Bishop of Oxford in leaving both the orthography and the phraseology of the manuscript in their original state, wherever they were not unintelligible. Indeed, the quaint, crisp phrases which prevail would have lost their charm if any attempt had been made to translate them.

In "The History of the Worthies of England, endeavoured "by Thomas Fuller, D.D., 1662," we find the following notice of John Preston:

"Before he commenced Master "of
"of Arts he was so far from emi-
"neney as but a little above con"tempt; thus the most gracious
"wines are the most muddy before "they are fine. Soon after, his "skill in philosophy rendered him
"to the general respect of the Uni"versity.

"He was the greatest pupil-
"monger in England in man's me"mory, having sixteen fellow-com"moners (most heirs to fair estates), "admitted in one year in Queen's
"Colledge, and provided convenient "accommodations for them. As
"William, the popular Earl of Nas"sau, was said to have won a sub"ject from the King of Spain to his "own party every time he put off his "hat, so was it commonly said in
"the
"the Colledge that every time when "Master Preston plucked off his "hat to Dr. Davenant, the Colledge
"Master, he gained a chamber
"or study for one of his pupils.
"Amongst whom, one Chambers,
"a Londoner (who dyed very "young), was very eminent for his
"learning.

"Being chosen Master of Em"manuel Colledge he removed thither
"with most of his pupils, and I "remember, when it was much admired where all these should find "lodgings in that Colledge, which "was so full already, Oh! said
"one, Master Preston will carry
"Chambers along with him.

"The party called Puritan being "then
"then most active in Parliament, "and Dr. Preston most powerful "with them, the Duke* rather used "then loved him to work that party "to his complyance. Some thought "the Doctor was unwilling to do "it, others thought he was unable, "that party being so diffusive, and "then in their designs (as since "in their practises) divided. How- "ever, whilst any hope, none but "Dr. Preston with the Duke, set "by and extolled; and, afterwards, "set by and neglected, when found "useless to the intended purpose. "In a word, my worthy friend fitly "calls him the Court Comet, blaz- "ing for a time and fadeing soon "afterwards.

“He was a perfect politician, "and used (lapwing like) to flutter "most on that place which was "furthest from his eggs; exact at "that concealing of his intentions, "with that simulation which some "make to lye in the marches of "things lawfull and unlawfull. He "had perfect command of his pas"sion, with the Caspian Sea never "ebbing nor flowing; and would "not alter his compos’d pase for "all the whipping which satyrical "wits bestowed upon him. He "never had wife or cure of souls; "and, leaving a plentifull, yet no "envidious estate, died Anno Do"mini, 1628, July 20.”

For a couple of centuries the manuscript lives of Mrs. Godolphin and and of the "Renowned Dr. Preston," had lain side by side amongst the Nuneham Papers.

Widely different indeed was the stern Puritan from the delicate Saint, but there are good lessons to be learnt from the lives of each; and I take it that this one lesson alone would suffice to warrant the printing of the manuscripts, namely, that, whether in the rougher roads of a professional career, or in the softer paths of a courtly and domestic life, it is very possible to keep "unspotted from the world."

E. W. H.
The Life of Dr. Preston

who dyed

Anno Christi. 1628.

John Preston, the son of Thomas & Alice Preston, was borne at Heyford, in Northamptonshire; a town divided by a little river into ye Upper and Lower Heyfords, and is in the Maps oft writ in ye plural number. It is a Rectory, and hath a faire church in the Lower Heyford, but yet stands in divers parishes.

That farme where Mr. Thomas Preston lived is in Bugbrooke parish, where they they buried & baptized. Heere was John the son of Thomas Preston baptized Octob 27th 1587. Yet was descended from that family of the Prestons that lived at Preston in Lancashire, from whence his great grand-father removed, upon occasion of a fatall quarrel with one Mr. Bradshaw a neighbour-gentleman, whom in his owne defence he slew, & satisfied the law, & was acquitted for it; but not the kindred of the person killed, who wayted an opp†tunity of revenge, as the manner of those Northern Coun†ryes then was.

It fell out not long after, that Mr. Bradshaw's next brother meets Mr. Preston neare the place where he had slayne his brother, & told him that he should doe as much for him, or he would revenge his blood; Mr. Preston told him that he had slaine his brother in his owne defence, & against his will; that he bore no evil mynde unto them, &
& therefore desired him he would forbear; but when nothing would prevail they fought, & Bradshaw fell again. At wch Mr. Preston was greatly troubled and grieved, for he saw that a fire was kindled that would not easily be quenched; and therefore resolved that he would leave that fatal country, though he was a gentleman of a very faire Estate. So walking one day very pensive in Westminster Hall, one Mr. Morgan of Heyford, wth whom he was acquainted, came unto him & demanded why he was so sad, to whom for answer he related ye former story.

Mr. Morgan knowing him to be a very gallant man, was very sensible of his estate, & told him that if he would goe wth him to Heyford, he should have a good farme to live in for ye present and what accomodation he could afford him. Mr. Preston thanked him, and after some consideration accepted his offer; offer; and so Mr. Preston of Preston in Lancashire became a kind farmer in Northamptonshire, where he afterwards lived & dyed and his son succeeded him, and so it came unto Thomas Preston as I have sayd.

His mother's name before she married was Marsh, who had an Unkle by the mother's side whose name was Craswell, a man of good estate & Esteeme in Northampton, where he lived and had been severall tymes Mayor. This Unkle being rich and having no childe, was very carefull of her, & tooke this son when young to himselfe, and sent him to the Free Schoole in Northampton; where he was a Schollar under yᵉ Goverment of Mr. Sanderson then Master of the Schoole, & after under Mr. Wastell who succeeded him; wᵗʰ whom remayning some tyme, his Unkle was pswaded to remove him into Bedfordshire, unto one Mr. Guest, who had some some tyme taught a private schoole in Northampton, & was accounted a better teacher of ye Greeke tongue; from whence, after he had prosecuted his studies in ye Greeke, he was sent to Cambridge, & admitted of King's College under the tuition of Mr. Busse, one of the Fellows, Anno Domini 1604.

Here he did as young schollars used to doe, that is applyed himself to the Genius of the College, & that was musique; and finding that the theory was shorte and soone atteyned, he made account ye practise would also be so; and accordingly adventured upon the Lute, the hardest instrument; but heere he found though theory was shorte, art was long; & so as unwilling to attend it, he used to say whilst fingering his lute, “Quantum hoc tempore Legi potuit;” and while his fingers were thus foundred on the Lute, it fell out that his Tutor Mr. Busse was chosen Master of the Schole.
Schole at Eaton, & so removed from ye Colledge, about two yeares after he was admitted; but coming not from Eaton but from another, he could not be of ye foundation, and therefore uncapable of those Preferments in ye College that were most worth, and so ye sooner persuaded to remove; this he did unto Queen's College, where he was received & admitted under ye tuition of Mr. Oliver Bowles, one of ye fellows of that House, a very holy & learned man, a noted & carefull Tutor; under his government he settled to his booke, & left his musique, by whose conduct & directions he grew in knowledge, and was improved unto very thriving undertakings in his studies.

a very gallant race; These Prestons, though removed from their native soyle & much impaired in their revenue, re-teined yet ye Garb and mettal of their Ancestors; they carried themselves, & were accounted Gentlemen. Something there was in this young Preston's Spirit that was not vulgar; I have seen in a booke of his, under his owne hand when younge, such sparklings of aspiring ingenuity as argued in him something that was not common.

He was as yet but junior Sophister, yet looked high & grew acquainted with those that were Gentile, & fancied State affairs, and Courtship, & that had de-sires or dispositions to be secretaries or agents in Princes' Courtes; he now thought it below him to be a minister, & held the study of Divinity to be a kind of honest silliness; he accord-ingly got acquainted with a merchant, by whose means he did procure that he His ambition to be a courtier, and undervaluing the Highest employment of ye ministry.
he should live in Paris and learn ye language & garb of France, & another in recompense should be exchangd to learne the mode & English tongue. Mr. Craswel, his Unkle at Northampton was by this tyme dead, and had bequeathed certeine Lands in that Towne to him after his wive's decease; these Lands he sells to put himselfe into a posture fit for that designe; But heere now he began to finde that he reckoned without his host; and that he should have said as the Apostle, James, 4—15. "If the Lord will I shall live, & doe this or that;" for the merchant dyes before the exchangge could be accomplished, & so those blooming hopes, that had thus long held up his imagination, died wth the merchant.

He was of an able, firme, well tempered constitution, browne, comely vis-sadge, vigorous and vived eye, but somewhat enclyning to that kinde of melancholly melancholly that ariseth from a dust & parched choller, w^th now began a little to be discovered in him; for being thus mated in his first designe, he grew discouraged, went not so much abroade amongst y^e gallants, but struck sayle to fortune, & retyred; yet his apetite was rather dammed up than dryed; for after a very little pause, & boyling over of his sullenness, he began again to steere the same course, although by more certaine & domesticque mediums, and if he must be shut up & confined to the Muses, resolves to be no ordinary servant to them.

His genius led him unto Naturall Philosophy, w^th by that tyme was become his propp taske, w^th he undertooke not as boyes use to doe, to serve their present use, but w^th devotion resolves to leave no secret unattempted; Adoreth Aristotle as his tutelary saint, and had a happiness usually to enter when when others stuck, and what was difficult to others he made little of.

No darke untrodden path in all his physicks & metaphysicks but he was perfect in it; & so drowned & devoted was he, that he seldom or never could be seen abroad, to the wonder & amazement of his former brave companions, so that no tyme passed "sine Linea," no not that betweene the ringing & tolling of the Bell to meales. And for his sleepe, he would let the bed cloathes hang downe, that in the night they might fall off, & so the cold awaken him; In so much that his tutor was constreyned to reade unto him moderation; and to tell him that as there might be intemperance in meates & drinkes, so also there might be in studies; but the evill of it, as yet he felt not; the sweet & ye good he did, who came off wth great honour and applause in all his acts, and was admired in in y^e Regent House when he sate for his degree, both by y^e Posers & all the Masters that examined him, and from that tyme much observed in y^e University.

About this tyme his tutor Mr. Bowles was called to y^e Rectory of Sutton in Bedfordshire, & so left y^e college, and another of y^e fellows, then Master, afterwards Doctor Potter, became his Tutor, a very learned man & great philosopher, who never went about to diswade him from his studies, but gave him all assistance & encouragement. The yeare following it came unto his tutor to be Head Lecturer in the College, and Sr. Preston being to probleme in the Chappel, made such an accurate & strong position, & answered so understandingly, that his Tutor borrowed his position of him when he had done, to looke & puse; & finding it elaborate, resolved to make more use of it, it, then ever his pupil did intend. The master of ye college at that tyme was Doctor Tyndal, who was also Deane of Ely, & resided for the most pte there; to whom the Tutor went, & carried his position wth him; wch he shewed to ye Master and acquainted him wth what he had observed, that he was a youth of great ptes and worth, & deserved some encouragement; the Master was an honest gallant man & loved a schollar, & glad of an opertunity to show it, & so bids his tutor to send Sr. Preston over to him to Ely, assuring him that he should not want what was in him to doe him good, & bade him hold on, for he would take care of him.

Soon after which there being an election in ye College, he was chosen fellow by unanimous consent of Master & fellows; when his tutor Mr. Porter brought him word of it, as he was at study not thinking of it, & told him him he must come downe presently into ye Chappel to be admitted; And accordingly was admitted fellow of Queen's College, in Cambridge, 1609, that is, five yeares after his first admission into ye University. He was not so much mouved at it as young students use to be, because he still looked at higher thinges, & had not quit in his retired thoughts his first designe of being some body at Court, to whch he thought this honour might be a barr. This curtesy was "non compos" to him, yet it was not manners to be discontent, but attend what should ensue.

He was by this time growne a master in Philosophy, had waded far in Aristotle, & met with few that were able to encounter him; and therefore resolves to goe another while to schoole to Hypocrates & Galen, & so verify what is so often said, "Ubi desinit Philosophus, incipit medicus." He had a very penetrating wit, and and exact judgement to conjecture of effects in causes, & prognostical events, & being skilfull in philosophy before, soone made the theory his owne, but because "Perfectio scientiarum est in summitate," the life & vigour of a science is in the Practice, he resolves to make enquiry after that; Bookes makes not men practitioners in any art, "Memo ex libris evasit artifex."

He retires to a friend of his in Kent, who was very famous for his practice, where he earnestly attended, & waited on ye trade & way of knowing simples, & compounding medicines, wherein he atteyned to that sufficiency, that had divinity failed, he might have been another Dr. Butler; yet what he had was not in vaine, for when any of his pupils were not well, though he sent them always to physitians, yet himselse pused, & many times corrected their prescriptions. It was not easy to allay his eager eager and unsatisfied appetite with any one art, Eccles. 5—10. "He that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with it," "Crescit amor Nummi, quantum ipsa pecunia crescit," the more you put into the soul ye wider presently it retcheth; He thought he could not be a good physician that could not reade ye powers of herbs & plants in stars & planets; Therefore he acquainted himself with Ptolomy, & other authors in Astrology, and other curious arts & calculations, as they are called. Acts 19. 19. that he might be able not only to study bookes, but men, & to reade men's fortunes in ye Heavenly bodyes.

But he could not, nor did reade his owne; there was a Southsayer that told Agathocles he should be slaine the next month; who asked how long he thought he should live after him? he answered many yeares; he told him he would prove one of ye two false, & leave the other other to the issue; & so commanded for to hange him presently. Mr. Preston was very busy amonge ye Howses of ye planets, but saw not there his owne domestick doome, nor what his Maker had determined concerning him; for, as he was in the Cælestial contemplations, it fell out that Mr. Cotton then fellow of Emanuel College preached in St. Marye's; where, Mr. Preston hearing him, was set about another Exercise, constreyned from his contemplations in Astrology to looke into himself, & consider what might possibly befall him.

It was his manner, as of other students, when they come home from ye sermons at St. Marye's to run unto their studies presently, or what was worse; but this young student was forced to retire & ruminate. The sermon had bereaved him of two beloved notions; one was his low opinion of the ministry & preaching; for he saw an over-ruling gravity gravity and Majesty in that sermon, that he thought had bin impossible to pulpits.

I have heard it often in ye college that he tooke away sixteene answers in a probleme in the Chappel, but heere was one he knew not how to take away. "Sed hæret lateri Lethalis arundo." No cunning in philosophy or skill in physick would suffice to heale this wound. Another (beloved notion he was bereaved of) was his great opinion of & ambition after State Imployments; for these were higher thingses yt now were offered to him; concernements of Eternal Influence, wch nothing could divert that he had studied hitherto.

There have been divers eminent & great physicians that began in medling wth their owne infirmities. Self love rides always on the forchorss. His owne acounts, and aking conscience, set Luther first first upon ye study of Divinity. Mr. Preston, after this affront & baffle in ye Pulpit, wanted ease; &, when he could not finde it in his other bookes & studies, begins a little to looke into ye Bible, & to consider of ye study of Divinity.

In the prosecution of his study in Philosophy, he found many of the schoolemen quoted, & so was willing to looke a little into them, and, finding those he lighted on pithy & sententious, went on.

It gave him ease that he was now a student in Divinity, and had left Albumaser, & Guido, & such high flowne speculations; yet it pleased him for to see & finde his master Aristotle so often quoted, & in such request amonge them; and thought, if that were to be a Preacher, he might adventure well enough on it; & so was drawne on on very farr into ye study of ye schoole-men. I have heard him say, there was nothing that ever Scotus or Occham wrote, but he had weighed & examined; he delighted much to reade them in the first & oldest editions that could be got; I have still a Scotus, in a very old print & a paper not inferiour to parchment, that hath his hand & notes upon it throughout; Yet he continued longer in Aquinas, whose summes he would sometimes read as the Barber cut his haire, and when any fell upon the place he read, he would not lay downe his booke but blow it off; and in this tune he continued, untill a rumour came into ye university that ye King would shortly come to visit them.

King James was happier in his education then his Mother would have had him; it pleased God to breede a Buchanon on purpose to guide his younger yeares; and, by that tyme he was ripe, Scotland
Scotland was grown acquainted with Geneve, & the King no stranger unto Mr. Calvin's way. The newes awakened all ye University, & there were few but promised themselves some good from this faire Gale; that, seeing promotion came neither from ye East, nor West, nor from the South, Psal. 75. 6, it must and would come from the North; and the Proverb be inverted, and be "Omne bonum ab Aquilone."

Doctor Harsnet, master of Pembrooke Hall, was then Vice Chancelor, a prudent well advised Governour, who, knowing well ye critical and able apprehension of ye king, was very carefull and sollicitous to pitch upon ye ablest in every faculty for actors in that solemne enterteynment, and himself made choyce of Mr. Preston to answer the Philosophy Act, and sent unto him to provide himself. He was ambitious enough by nature, and had this newes come a little sooner, nothing nothing had bin more suitable to his inclination and designe, but now the gentleman was Planet struck, growne dull & Phligmatique, Mr. Cotton's sermon had so invaded him, that Kings and Courts were no such great thinges to him, especially when he understood y' another was resolved on for answerer.

Doctor Wren was then a very pregnant Schollar in Pembrooke Hall, and also chapline to Bishop Andrews, and thought fit to be imployed in this Commencement service, yet was not willing to have any other place but answerer. The Vice Chancelor urged his promise and engagement to Mr. Preston, and his opinion of his great abillity; but nothing would serve, the Vice Chancelor's College and the Bishop's Chaplin must have precedency, w'h he most seriously excused to Mr. Preston, & endeavoured to reconcile him to the first Opponent's place, w'h he declyned declyned as being too obnoxious to the Answerer, who is indeed the Lord and Ruler of the Act; but there was no removing now, and so he goes about it with much unwillingness, being rather driven than drawne unto it.

His great and first care was to bring his argument to a head, without affronte or Interruptions from the Answerer; and so made all his major propositions plausible and firme, that his adversary might neither be willing, nor able, to enter there, and the minor still backt by other syllogismes; & so the Argument went on unto Issue; which fell out well for Mr. Preston; for, in disputations of consequence, the Answerers are many times so fearfull of ye. event that they Slur & trouble ye. opponents all they can and deny things evident; which had bin the case in all former Acts; There was such wrangling about their Syllogismes that sullyed and clouded the the debates extremely, and put the King's Acumen into Streights.

But when Mr. Preston still cleared his way, and nothing was denied, but what was ready to be proved, the King was greatly satisfied, & gave good heede, w^th he might well doe, because the question was tempered & fitted to his content: namely whether Dogs could make syllogismes*. The opponent urged that they could; an Ethymeme (said he), is a lawfull & reall syllogisme, but dogs can make them; he instanced in a Hound, who hath ye major proposition in his minde, namely, the hare is gone either this way, or that way, smells out the minor w^th his nose, namely, she is not gone that way, & follows the conclusion, "Ergo," this way, w^th open mouth.

The instance suited w^th ye Auditory and was applauded, and put the Answerer to his distinctions, that dogs might have sagacity, but not sapience, in thinges especially of Prey, and that did not concerne their belly, might be "nasutuli" but not "Logici," had much in their mouths, little in their myndes, unless it had relation to their mouths, that their lips were larger than their understandings; which the opponent still endeavoured to evade with another syllogisme, & put the dogs upon a fresh scent. The Moderator, Doctor Reade, began to be afraid, and to think how troublesome a pack of hounds well followed and applauded at last might prove; and so came in unto the Answerer's Ayd, and told the Opponent that his dogs he beleeved were very weary, and desired him to take them off; and when the Opponent would not yeild, but hallowed still and put them on, he interposed his authority & silenced him.

The King, in his conceit, was all this while while upon New Market Heath, & liked the sport; and, therefore, stands up and tells the Moderator plainly he was not satisfied in all that had bin answered, but did believe a hound had more in him than was imagined. I had myself (said he) a dog that stragling farr from all his fellows had light upon a very fresh scent, but considering he was all alone and had none to second and assist him in it, observes the place & goes away to his fellows, and by such yelling arguments as they best understand, prevayled w^th a pty of them to goe along w^th him, and, bringing them to the place, pursued it into an open view. Now the King desired for to know how this could be contrived and carried on without an exercise of understanding, or what the Moderatour could have done in that case better, & desired him that either he would thinke better of his dogs or not so highly of himselfe!

The
The Opponent also desired leave to pursue the King’s game, which he had started to an issue; But the Answerer protested that His Majesties dogs were always to be excepted, who hunted not by common law but by prerogative; but the Moderatour fearing the King might let loose another of his hounds, and make more worke, applyes himself with all submissive devotion to the King, acknowledged his dogs were able to outdoe him, besought His Majesty to beleev he had ye better, that he would consider how his illustrious influence had already ripened & concocted all their arguments & Understandings; that, whereas in ye morning the Reverend and Grave Divines could not make syllogismes, the Lawyers could not, nor the Physicians, now every dog could, especially His Majesties!

All men acknowledged it was a good bit to stop with, it was growne late, and so so the congregation was remoued unto the Regent Howse, and the King went off well pleased with ye business; the other acts were easily forgotten, but the discourse and logike of the dogs was fresh in mouth and memory, & the Philosophy Act applauded universally; the King commended all the Actors, but above all the Opponent. It was easy to discerne that ye King's hound had opened a way for Mr. Preston at ye Court if he were willing; Yea, many of the great ones put him in mynde, and promised all assistance and encouragement. Sr Fulke Grevil, afterwards Lord Brook, was greatly taken with him, &, after many demonstrations of his reall love, setled at last a styppend on him of fifty pounds p annum, and was his friend until his last hower.

But his ambition after courtship was well allayed, so as he did not ravenously pursue it, being now resolved to be a minister; nister; he fell to the study of moderne writers, especially Mr. Calvin, whose very style & language much affected him. The Courtiers wondred he did not bite; because as it's said Prov. 16.15. "In the light of the King's countenance is life, and his favour is as the cloud of the latter raine;" that a young man should not be ambitious, and a good eye not see, they did not understand; & they began now to be a little jealous of him.
The Life of

He was reserved naturally, and could keepe councell, so that few knew how Mr. Cotton's sermon had affected & wrought upon him; this not sayling when the wynd blew, begat suspition; some judged he was modest & wanted oppportunity to bring him on, some that he was melancholly, & so neglected what was propp for him to intend, some thought him busy and intent upon his pupils who now began to come from all pts; but the Polititians assured themselves it was some inclination to puritanisme, a name now odious at Courte, for it could not be, said they, that he should let so faire an oppportunity miscarry, if he had not something else in veiu.

Kings think themselves extremely undervallued, if a word be not enough. Cardinal Poole being chosen Pope at midnight by the conclave, & sent unto to come & be admitted, desired it might be let alone untill ye morning, because it was not a worke of Darkness, an honnest Argument, but not Italian enough. "Quis nisi mentis inops." So they went back & chose another. When Balaam came not at the first call, see how Balack reasons. Numb. 22. 37. "Am I not able indeed to promote thee to honour?"

But Mr. Preston indeed had another King in his thoughts, & having found treasure treasure in the field, parts with all for that. Mat. 13. 44. A purchase is not worth the having that hath not some convenience annexed, or may not some way be improved. God was a greater good than man. Heaven than Earth, a Crowne of Glory than a Crowne of Gold. So this neglect & sefe denial was well interpreted by good men, and the opinion that he affected Puri-tans, which blasted him at Court, begun to blazon him at home, and worke a reputation, that to him was more acceptable.

Many thought him meeete to be trusted with the care of youth and had their eyes upon him for their sons or friends. Mr. Morgan of Heyford had been some tyme dead, and left his son & heyre an orphan in trust with some that were his kinsmen and like to manage his estate to most advantage; who, when sent to the University, sity, was bequeathed to Mr. Preston's care; not only for the relation he had to Heyford, his native Towne, and that family, but also that, by that means, the young gentleman might be preserved from the influence of his other friends, who were many of them Popish!

King James had bin so well pleased at the Commencement held before him lately, that he resolves upon another visit; The Heads agree to enterteine him with a comedy. There was one Fuggles of Clare Hall, that had made a jeering comedy against ye Lawyers, called "Ignoramus;" this was resolved on to be acted before the King, and great care was taken to accomodate all parts, with Actors answerable.

Mr. Morgan was a comely modest gentleman, and was supposed would well become a woman's dress, and accordingly his Tutor Mr. Preston sent to, that that he would admit and give all encouragement to the Service. He liked not the notion, nor could believe his friends intended he should be a Player, & so desired to be excused; But the Guardians were not so exact & scrupulous, but thought if he played this game well, he might winne more than could be hoped for elsewhere; and so Mr. Morgan was allowed by his Guardians to act his part, and afterwards removed unto Oxford, & suffer'd to play what part he would, and so relapsed to Popery, wch hath proved fatall to him and his.

Heere was matter for Mr. Preston's back friends to argue he was no courtier, that would deny so small a curtesy to those that had so freely offered him greater; it was resented wth a kind of angry indignation that their offers had so little influence upon him, and some watched an oppportunity to make him him sensible of this neglect; there is no such solècisme at Court as independency, "si non vis ut per illos tibi bene sit, efficient ut sit male." But Mr. Preston by this tyme had cast up all accounts, & resolved to stand to his bargaine whatsoever it cost him; Only he thought if he must be a Puritan, & bid farewell to all carnall & Court designes, he would not be one of the Lower Rank, but would get places if he could. "Mediocribus esse Poetis, non Dij, non homines, non columnæ." That counsell of the wise man, Eccles. 9. 10. "whatsoever thy hand findeth to doe, doe it with all thy might," he always practised, & what is comonly said was true in him, "in magnis ingeniis nihil mediocre."

This faithfulness to Mr. Morgan (attended with so great a shadow unto himself) encreased his reputation in ye country, so that now he was accounted ye only tutor; and, being carefull to reade reade unto them & direct their studyes, he found himselfe much abridged of his owne tyme, & was constreyned to take up tyme that should have bin bestowed on his body; he also grew acquainted now w\(^{th}\) many eminent & Godly ministers, as Mr. Dod and Mr. Hindersham, who would come often to his chamber, and he was so hardened in his way, that he would get them many times to goe to prayer with his pupils, a boldness not adventured on by any other; but by these labours his able body was debilitated.

It was a great Oratour that said, "At first, said he, I would not pleade, at last I could not." Mr. Preston in his youth would not sleepe, but let ye bed cloathes hang downe so as to awaken him; now he could not, but about midnight still awaked & slept no more: whereby in tyme his body languished, and could not answer as formerly.

Mr.
Doctr Preston.

Mr. Butler of Clare Hall was then the Oracle in physick, to him he goes, & declares his condition, who, after some questions, bade him take tobacco, & so leaves him; he knew that Butler was odd & humerous, & thought he might give him this advice to try him, and therefore resolved to wayt awhile before he medled wth so unusuall a medicine, which Hypocrates & Galen had never prescribed to any of their patients, and was at that tyme not so comon nor of good report; but his want of rest con- tinuing, & his appetite unto his booke encreasing, he returnes to Mr. Butler as a stranger, and propounds the case againe. Master Butler gives ye same advice, and being satisfied that he was serious now, he began to take it, and found that this hot copious fume ascending did draw those crudityes from the stomach's mouth yt hindered concoction of his meate, and vapours from it that occasion sleepe, and so restored his rest, &
& that in tyme his strength; and so he went on in his worke untill Dr. Tyndall, Mer of the College, dyed.

He was an old man, and that preferment of the mastership of Queene’s Colledge, more accounted of than now it is; there were many that had their eyes upon it, but Dr. Montaine especially, who was often heard to profess he would rather be Master of that college than Deane of Westminster.

But Mr. Preston had another in his eye, Dr. Davenant, a gentleman well descend-ed, and was a Fellow-comoner when undergraduat, but very painfull and of great capacity, & grew accordingly in learning & reputation, & for his worth & pts was already chosen Margret Professor, & read in the schools wth much applause those excellent lectures upon the Colossians sians which now are printed; him Mr. Preston pitched upon, but knew it must be carryed very privately; for the Montaine was already growne to some bigness, was one of pts, & first observed in acting "Miles Gloriosus" in the college, and had bin Chaplin to the Earle of Essex, but like the Heliotrope or flower of y° sun, did now adore Sr Robert Carr, already Viscount Rochester, the only favorite. When it was agreed amonge the Persians that he should reigne whose horss first saw the rising sun & neighed at it, one turned his horses head towards the Montaines, beleeving that ye sun would first arise there; but it fell not out so heere.

Mr. Preston having layd his plot beforehand, & seene what Montaine was in his way, had taken care that word should be daily brought him how ye old doctor did; and when he found him irrecoverable, layd horses & all things ready ready, & upon notice of his being dead, goes presently & was at London & in Whitehall before any light appeared on the Montaine Topp. The Court was quiet, & he had some friends there, his business was only to get a free election, w^th he made means to procure; yet knowing also w^th whom he had to doe, makes some addresses unto Viscount Rochester in ye behalfe of Dr. Davenant, who, being unacquainted w^th his chap-lin's appetite to that particular, was faire and willing to befriend a learned enterprise. So Mr. Preston returned unto ye College before ye Master's death was much took notice of, and assembling Dr. Davenant's friends, acquaints them w^th what had passed at Court; and so they went immediately to Election, w^ch was easily and fairly carryed for Dr. Davenant, who, being called, was admitted presently.

But when Dr. Montaine understood that that Dr. Tyndal was dead, he sends & goes to Court & College for to make friends; but alass! the game was played, and he shut out. Never did Aëtna or Vesuvius more fume, but there was no care, only he threatens & takes on against ye Actors, but they were innocent, & not obnoxious. This Dr. had made great promises, & gave a very goodly piece of plate into ye College, with this inscription, "sic incipio," but now he vowed it should be "sic desino." However the college for the present was well essayd, & grew in Reputation very much, and, because they wanted roome to entereteyne the numbers that flocked to them, they built that goodly fabrick that conteyns many faire lodgings both for fellows & scholars, towards King's College.

It was not long before it came to Mr. Preston’s course to be Deane and Catechist, wch he resolved to improve by going going through a body of Divinity, that might be a guide to the scholars in their studies of Divinity; for it was not his opinion that others should do as he had done, that is use the shoolemen first, and then come to ye moderne writers; but first reade Summes and Systemes in Divinity, so as to settle their judgements, & then to reade Fathers & scholemen, or what they had a mynde to. This being knowne, & some honnest townsmen hearing him at first by chance, there came the next day very many for to heare him, & ye next day more both townsmen and scholars from other colleges, so that the outward chapple would be often full before the fellows came.

Master Preston was of a very meek & quiet spirit, never resented injuries, nor provoked any unto averseness, yet had some enimyes, "Si injuria multos tibi fecit Inimicos faciet vidia multos."
Doctr Preston.

What had Paul done, Acts 13. 45. for to deserve so sharpe an opposition? but envy moved them. There had bin other Deanes and Catechists before this gentleman, yet no such crowding. Complaint was made to the Vice Chancellor of this unusual kind of Catechising; it was assured that not only townsmen & scholars mingled, but other colleges intruded also; that the fellows, for the crowd & multitude, could not get through & come to chappel to their places; that it was not safe for any man to be thus adored & doted on, unless they had a minde to cry up Puritanisme, wth would in short tyme pull them downe; that the Crosier staffe would not support them longe if such assemblyes were encouraged; “obsta principiis sero medicina paratur,” etc.

Upon the whole an order was agreed on in the consistory & sent unto the College, College, that the scholars & Townsmen should be confined to their proper Preachers; that no stranger, neither townsmen nor scholars, should presume, on any pretence whatsoever, to come to those lectures, that were proper only to the members of the college. The Edict was observed punctually, and the Auditory by it much impaired; for had strangers still been permitted to attend, those sermons had been printed as well as others; for there were divers that exactly noted, & wrote out all faire, unto the tyme of this restreynt, but no one after that could goe on with it, & so it rests; but he went on & was assiduous to the Yeare's End, & waded through it, which was a very great helpe unto many of his pupils, who made ye greater benefit of those thinges, because they were not common & in Print.

About that tyme the Lecture at Trinity church, & ye sermons at St. Andrews,
Doctr Preston.

Andrews, were prohibited, & ye scholars all confined to St. Maryes; which did occasion Mr. Preston to reade Divinity unto his pupils on the Lorde's dayes at three of the clock in ye after-noone, which he often did upon the weeke dayes; but the townsmen and the scholars of other colleges who had tasted of his spirit in the chapple, endeavoured that he would doe it where they might heare. Buttolphs belongs to Queen's College, and is usually supplyed by one of that Howse, there he was willing to make tryall how it would take, and resolves the next Lord's day to preach at three of ye clock, after St. Marye's sermon should be ended; which, though as supposed but little knowne, occasioned such a thronge & crowd as was incredible; men were not cloyed with preaching then, nor waxed wanton.

There dwelt then in the parish, one Dr. Newcomb, a civilian & comissary to to the Chancelor of Ely, who being in the Church & seeing ye crowd, commanded that evening prayer only should be read, but no sermon; the minister intreated that for that tyme Mr. Preston might be allowed to preach, so did ye Earl of Lincolne & others in ye church; but he was resolute, & because he would not be further importuned, went home with his familly, & left them to determine at their peril what they would doe. So, upon advice, it was concluded that ye sermon should goe on, & Mr. Preston preached a very holy sermon upon 2 Peter 3. 17-18. There was so much time spent in debate about it, & messages, before the comissary left the congregation, that it was too late to doe both, and, therefore, they adventured for that tyme to forbeare Comon Prayer, that so the scholars might departe and be at college Prayer.

But this instructed Dr. Newcomb in his his complaint; the Court was then neare hand at Newmarket, thither the Comissary hastens next day, and finding the Bishop of Ely there & many other clergymen, assures them that Mr. Preston was in heart, & would quickly be in practise, a Non-Conformist, and was so followed and adored in the University, that unless some speedy course were taken with him, they might cast their caps at all Conformity, & see their power trodden under foote; and told them gentleness was not the way, for he was cunning, & would recover all, if he were not throughly dealt with.

There was an Advocate for Mr. Preston, but the Dr. being first in his owne cause seemed just, (Prov. 17. 18.) & spake to those who were willing to beleve. The Puritans began to be considerable, & they doubted he might come in tyme to head them. It is a great security to a man to be despised, "contempto nullus nullus diligenter nocet." A man that hath nothing in him, & so not owned, may be exorbitant, as he of one in his tyme "contemptu jam liber erat." But David, that had a pty following him, must have an army to attend him; and therefore he did wisely to profess himselfe a dead dog, or a flea. 1 Sam. 24. 14.

The King was made acquainted wth this complaint, & assured that Mr. Preston had as strong an influence into the Puritans, as the Principle of ye Jesuits, wch was "Aqua viva" to others; and therefore it behoved him to consider what to doe. A word was enough to a wise & jealous King, who did not love to play an after game, and, therefore, hearde himselfe ye Doctor's information, enquires whether the Bishop's & Chancellor's jurisdiction extended to members of a College, & finally concludes to proceed against him by the power of the University.
Doct'r Preston.

A letter is framed at ye tyme to Dr. Scot, Master of Clare Hall, Vice Chancellor at that tyme, and to the Heads, to call before them Mr. Preston, to give a strict account of ye notorious disobedience unto the Comisary; he answers mildly that he was not guilty; refers himself to the Auditory that Evening prayer was omitted because the schollars might dep'te in due tyme (seeing the tyme allotted for it was spent in treating w'th ye Comissary), not out of any disrespect to ye service, wh'le he himselfe did usually attend at other tymes.

When the Wolfe complained that the Lamb had fouled the water that he was to drinke, the Lambe answered that if he had defiled it, yet that could not prejudice the Wolfe that was above it, for the mud would certeynlly descend downwards: But this answer did not fill the hungry belly of the Wolfe. Mr.
Mr. Preston's innocency did aggravate his crime, which was his popularity; and, therefore, they told him they were bound to support by all just means the Bishop's jurisdiction; that the King had honoured him in leaving that affront to be examined by his proper judges, and that except he could take off the Court, they must and would proceed to a very round and serious censure! That a fellow of a College for preaching of an innocent and honest sermon, in a church belonging to the College, by the consent & in the hearing of the Incumbent, should be thus vigourously prosecuted, was something hard.

Among many other gentlemen of quality that were Pupils unto Mr. Preston at this tyme, there was one Sr Capel Bedels, an orphan, of a very faire estate in Huntingtonshire, a daughter's son of old Sr Arthur Capel; who, being Guardian Guardian to his grandchild, had recommended him, as he had done many of his owne sons, unto his goverment; it was a great trust, & Mr. Preston's care was answerable; and, because "plus vivdent oculi," he had his spyes, that gave him notice of all their carriages & correspondencies; by one of these he was informed that Sir Capell haunted Dr. Newcomb's howse, and was familliar wth his daughter, Mrs. Jane Newcomb, a very propp well bred gentlewoman; his Tutor asked if they were contracted, he answered "no, but would be very shortly, for he was resolved to have her."

Mr. Preston charges him to keepe all secret, that Sr Capel might not think he was acquainted wth it; and imediately appoints a journey unto Saffron Walden, to take the ayre and see that stately building at Audley End, & tooke divers of his fellow comoners alonge, as he had done at other tymes, and amongst others this Sr Capel Bedles; When they had dined & viewed the Howse, it was propounded by one of them that they might goe that night to Haddam & visit old Sr Arthur Capel, seeing they were thus farr on their way & it was late; Mr. Preston seemed to be indifferent, and so the proposition took; and with none more than Sr Capel, who knew his grandfather would fill his pockets, and that would sweeten his Newcomb mistress' Embraces, and make him welcomb to her.

The old knight was glad to Enter-teyne such welcom guests, & that night there was no discourse but of the stately roomes, & goodly gallery at Audley End, & so the young gentleman went to bedd pleased that the college bell would not waken him; but Mr. Preston slept not, "in utrumque aurem," but awakened betimes, & acquaints Sr Arthur Arthur with all the business, adviseth with him by no means to omit the gentleman's returne to ye college, for though ye wound might seeme quite cured, & he never so much engage forbearance, yet frequent apparitions would redintegrate. "Et nihil facilius quam amor recrudescit."

Sir Arthur was a very wise man, & had experience of ye world, thanks Mr. Preston for his faithfulness, pretends Sr Capel wanted some thinge, and desires his tutor to give him leave to stay a little tyme untill he could be furnished, & then he should be sent; to which Mr. Preston easily consented, & so the rest retourned; after which the old Knight told Sr Capel that he began to grow a man, and it would be fit for him to travayle before he setled, & so prevails with him to be content. But what saith Mrs. Newcomb who is rob'd by this means of her vowed and resolved servant, vant, & her crafty father that beholds so good a morsell snacht from betweene his teeth? Doe you thinke he had forgotten this when Mr. Preston came to preach within his jurisdiction? Other injuryes phaps may be forgotten, but loss of mony is not. "Ploratur lachrymis amissa pecunia veris."

Mr. Preston was no stranger altogether at Court; However now there was no remedy. When he came to Newmarket, he found that Bishop Andrews, then Bishop of Ely, was Cheife; & his jurisdiction, in the Commissary, was it that was pretended to be affronted; and therefore applyed himself to him, & told him that he did not purpose to offend, but being engaged for to preach at that tyme, could not with honour disappoint the Auditory; if he suspected him, for anythinge, he desired he would examine him, & satisfy himselfe. The Bishop told him that ye King was informed formed he was an enimy to formes of Prayer, & held no prayer lawfull but what was conceived, & therefore, being popular, his judgement & opinion might doe hurt.

Mr. Preston answered that it was a slander, for he thought set formes lawfull, and refused not to be present at ye college prayer; The Bishop answered that he was glad, & would informe the King, and doe him all ye good he could, & bade him wayte awhile, and then repaire to him againe for satisfaction in it; and so tyme passed on, & there was nothing done. There were some at Court that wisshed well to Mr. Preston, as Dr. Young, an honest Scotchman, that was Deane of Winchester; who told Mr. Preston plainly that Bp Andrews was his greatest Adversary, and, though he gave him good wordes, yet he assured the King that if Mr. Preston were not for this expelled ye University, Lord Bp Bp's would not long continue. But Mr. Preston was accounted (& not without cause) a learned man, and therefore the Bishop was not willing to appeare against him; yet desired the punishment might be inflicted where the fact was done, and that in ye University.

Master Preston saw now that ye Bishop was a courtier, & could afford wordes where deeds were not intended, & therefore goes again to the Bishop, & tells him plainly that he or none must put a period to his attendance; and that either he would speake to the King in his behalfe, or tell him plainly that he would not, that he might know from whence all his trouble flowed. The Bishop paused awhile on this bold carriadge, and at last bade him come to him at such a tyme againe, & he would deale with ye King in his behalfe. So he goes to the King, & tells him, that that however Mr. Preston was very dangerous & it would be a very great security if he were handsomely expelled, yet he doubted it would not bear well should it be done for this offence; for he would be absolved in the mynds & opinions of men, & be owned and applauded as their martyr, & might phaps recover & live to be revenged; & therefore thought it would be better for to enjoyne him to declare his judgement as to formes of prayer, for that would be accounted a Recantation, & would weaken his Reputation with ye Puritans; w^h would be enough; for, if they could divide him from his party, they should not fear him; for he said his carriage argued confidence in some assistance, w^h when they had removed, they should be strong enough at single hand.

All that ye Bpp spake was as if "ex tripoche;" an order, therefore, was presently sently drawe & sent to ye Vice Chancellor, that Mr. Preston should in Buttolph's church declare his judgement about Formes of Prayer, on such a Sunday, or else they should imediately proceede against him according to their first instructions.

Mr. Preston was glad there was a way out, yet sensible of ye hard hand that had bin carryed towards him; but now there was no remedy; & in vaine was it to strive against ye streame. Before he could get home, the newes was all about ye towne that Mr. Preston was to preach a recantation sermon at Buttolph's church on such a day. This was good sporte to ye brave blades, who now came crowding as fast as any for to heare, and no sin now for any to be absent from prayer; and indeed there was a very great assembly, though he did all he could to have concealed it. He went on upon his former text & & preached a very profitable sermon concerning growing in Grace, & directed prayer as a speciall means to it. And this, he said, was of two sortes; Either that which was suddaine, extempory, and conceived; or, set, enjoyned, & prescribed before, not only for the sense & scope, but also words and phrases; And, whereas some thought this was to stint ye Spirit, he said there was a liberty to use conceived prayer at other times, wherein the spirit might expatiate & enlarge itself, though not in extension & variety of language.

The sons who came to laugh had little cause to doe it; for this passage was at ye very close of the sermon; all before being both sharpe & searching. Both sides went home sylent, & not without some prynts of good upon many of their spirits. "Optimus orator censandus, non qui meruit auditorem judicium, sed qui abstulit." He makes
The best speech that binds his hearers rather to thinke what was said than who said it.

The good fellows were nothing so merry at the end, as at ye beginning of ye sermon. Indifferent hearers praised all, & were confirmed in a good opinion of the Preacher; good men were glad he came off so well, and was at liberty to preach again where they might heare him; Himselxe was troubled lest any thinge he had said should be mistaken or misinterpreted, as he was apt to be; But there were many eyes upon this action, and all wayted to see the issue. The Courtiers did not like it that, after such tossings too & fro, he should thus light upon his feete; yet would not meddle for ye present, but wayt occasions; those who were well affected, were glad he was engaged against the Court and Bishops, & did presage he might be instrumentall to their downfall; fall; every one laboured to engage him more & more against them.

The Spanish match was then ye Common talk, & great averseness appeared in ye generality of people. Dr. Willet had presumed to offer arguments to the King against matching wth Idolaters; the King was greatly vexed at this adventure, & tooke great pains to convince the Docter that a Papist was no Idolater: "sed non persuadebat etiam si persuaserat." The people were dissatisfied, & there being then a Parliament, a very hon'ble and able member of ye howse of Lords prevayled wth Mr. Preston to write some arguments against it; and, though there were very severe edicts & Proclamations against scandelous papers, & intermedling wth matters of state, yet he promised it should be scattered & divulged unto fit persons, and none should know from whence or whom it came.

Accordingly,
Accordingly, when it was finished, & written faire, one gave it to a porter whom he met in Holborne, & bad him leave it according to ye direction. The next day a great Lord came unto him that had pswaded Mr. Preston unto the service, and tells him that he had met with such a peece against ye Spanish match as he never saw, & protested that he was convinced, & would speake against it in ye Howse, whatever came of it. The other asked him who made it, & where he had it, he assured him he knew not, but it was left at his lodging by he knew not whom; the Lord desired he might see it, & so it was coppyed out & spreade among those of ye Parliament they thought fit, but the Authour of it never knowne.

King James had something always in his speeches and writings against the Puritans, wch was ill taken, for that it was apparent that those meant thereby thereby were godly and conscientious persons.

The howse of Comons was the only mote in King James his eye, the "Remora" (as he conceived) unto his absolute dominion; for he knew not how to engage them as he had done ye Lawyers and Divines; but if he stopt one mouth with preferment this Parliament, there would be others open ye next against him. There were some now that冒险ed to apologize for Puritans, & to say in Parliament that honest men were wounded under that name, & to propose that Godly ministers might not be silenced & throwne out of their freeholds for tryfles & ceremonyes. But King James would have none of that stuffe, and therefore breaks up the Parliam^1, & sets out proclamations. But people love not to be forced to duty, "Hominis duci volunt non cogi."

The King's designe to make the schollars his, as he had done ye lawyers, in order to the making himselfe absolute.

The Chaplines that attended monthly at Court, were not ambitious of preaching very often; and so a combination was agreed on for Preachers before the King, whenever he should lye within 12 miles of Cambridge. The King did not despaire of making Scholars his, and therefore used all endeavours to oblige them, especially Cambridge men, where a seed of Puritans had been a long time; and though ye plaines about Newmarket afforded better winter game than elsewhere, yet scholars, he conceived, might be catcht sometimes as well as hares; and so willing they should preach before him. Young men he knew would preach themselves, "omnis oratio docet, aut rem, aut animum dicentis;" and thus he should learne either thinges or persons.

By this means it came to Mr. Preston's turn to preach before the King at Royston, he was so mufled at Court in in Dr. Newcomb's business, that he knew not what to do; he could not decline it altogether, for that would have exposed him unto too much observation, and yet he greatly feared what might befall him in ye doing of it; therefore he changed his course with one that was to preach a little after, & did it very privately, that if his enemys should have designes, they might be disappointed; and so it was not much knowne when he was to preach.

It fell out that his course came upon a Tewsday, when the King was at Hintchingbrook; the Court was very thin, the Prince & Duke of Buckingham both abroad, and the King himselfe was for a hunting match that day, and gave order that the sermon should begin at eight aclock. Master Preston had some at court that were solicitous as well as he, & they told him it would give very great content if he would take some occasion occasion in the sermon to shew his judgement, as he had done before, about set formes. Dr. Young, Deane of Winchester (of whom I spake before) did then attend, and when the King came in & sate down in the chaire, he told him who it was that preached, & said he hoped he would give content. I pray God he doth, said the King. His text was Jo\textsuperscript{n} 1. 16. "And of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace;" wher he so cleerely opened, & applyed, that the King sate all ye while very quiet, & never stirred or spake to anybody, but by his lookes discovered he was pleased.

When all was done, he came unto him as the manner was to kisse his hand, when ye King asked him of what Preston he was descended? he answered of that in Lancashire; then said the King, you have many of yo\textsuperscript{r} name and kindred very eminent, and Preston the Priest Priest, although a Papist, is a very learned man.

Great hast was made to bring in dynner, and the King was very pleasant all the tyme, had his eye continually on Mr. Preston, & spake of divers passadges in the sermon with much content; specially that of the Arminians putting God into the same extremity that Darius was put in (Dan. 6.) when he would have saved Daniel but could not. But, as soone as ever Mr. Preston was retyred, the Marquess Hamilton kneeled downe, and besought the King that he might comend the Preacher to him for his Chaplyn; protested that he did not know him, but that he was moved by the weight & strength of that he had delivered; told him that he spake no pen & Inckorne language, but as one that comprehended what he said, and that he could not but have substance & matter in him. The King acknowledged ledged all, but said it was too early, remembered Newmarket busyness, & was reserved.

Sir Ralf Freeman, one of ye Mas\textsuperscript{trs} of Requests, had married a kinswoman of ye Duke of Buckingham's, & was a kinsman unto Mr. Preston; he makes relation of ye business unto the Duke, & told him if now he would appeare in favour of his cousin Preston, he might oblige the Puritans, & lay a groundworke to his owne security, if tempests should arise; assured him that Mr. Preston was ingenuous, & that ye King & all ye court were taken with the sermon, and did approve it. The Duke of Buckingham was a wise man, apprehensive of what Sr. Ralf suggested seasonably, saw those they called Puritans were growing, and in the Parliament were thought considerable; knew that ye King's affection might coole, & he neede friends; he therefore tooke Sr
Sr Ralf's discourse into his most serious thoughts. An honest man one Mr. Packer was then his secretary, & he set on what Sr Ralf Freeman had suggested; and so it came unto a resolution that Mr. Preston should be owned. The Duke comanded Sr Ralf Freeman to goe to Mr. Preston from him, and acquaint him with his good opinion of him, and that he desired to see him. Indeed there was such a concurrence & concentring of oppinions & desires amonge the courtiers, that it was assured Mr. Preston that he might be Chaplin unto whom he would; and it was now only a deliberation which of these offers he should accept, and whom he would acknowledge his Patron & Protector for the tyme to come.

There was not so few clergymen at any tyme at Court, and so no kind of opposition; yet the King himselfe hung back, & would doe nothing hastily; he was was not reconcilable to the Puritans, and so desired not in that respect for to engage him. Yet he desired to deprive the Puritans of Mr. Preston, & so divide him from them; and would doe any thinge that might drive on that. Besides considering how many Mr. Preston had wonne, that he was a young man & might be drawne on, he would not therefore hinder or oppose his advancement. So it was the joynt oppinion that the best preferment was to be the Prince's chaplin, who then was growne & had a howsehold.

This therefore was represented unto Sr Ralf Freeman and his oppinion required; who quickly yeelded & proposed it to ye Duke. Both Prince & Duke had bin abroad, & neither of them had heard of ye sermon. When therefore Mr. Preston was brought unto ye Duke, he very seriously received him; him; told him it was the Prince's unhappiness & his to be absent when he did preach; & therefore desired him that he would voutsafe a copy of his sermon to him; and believe that he would be ready to the best and utmost of his power to serve him.

There were many other courtiers that desired copies of ye sermon; and, ye court not staying there, Master Preston came home to furnish copies. He never penned sermon word for word, but wrote what came into his mynde, and as it came, & that in no good hand, & so it was a business to provide these copies; wth yet, he seriously attended untill they were written faire, and then goes to court, where the Duke presents him to ye Prince; and so he was made & admitted chaplin to ye Prince in ordinary, for as then the Prince had not compleated the number he intended, wth was six; these were each intended to to wayt two months by the yeare, to preach unto ye household upon ye Lord's days, & performe such dutyes as were required of them.

But God was making other worke for Mr. Preston; for Doctor Tolson, Bishop of Salisbury, dyes, and leaves a wife and many children unprovided for, for he had bin Bishop but a little while. This wife of his was Dr. Davenant's sister; in pitty, therefore, & comisseration of her case, it was proposed to the King, by those that were his friends, that Doctor Davenant, a single man & well deserving, might succeed his brother in the Bishoprick; and so make some provision for his children. The King thought very well of Doctor Davenant, not only for his singular abilities & labours in the University, but for his paines also & service in the Synod of Dort against Arminius: and it was looked on as a deed of charity, & so beleaved believed he would carry it. But this created Mr. Preston cares; Dr. Davenant had bin his constant & faithfull friend, & given countenance upon all occasions to him & all his pupils; but now who should succeed, & where should Mr. Preston find another shelter. The fellows for the most pte were not his friends, envied his numbers, & great relations, & there was no man like so to befriend him. The Margaret professor's place would be voyd also by this remove, and many able stirring batchelrs in divinity proposed unto Mr. Preston that place, and assured him that the election would be easily carryed for him.

The truth is, he had no great hope to doe any great good in the election of the Master of the College; & one Dr. Mansel being named, a very moderate goodnatured man, he let that care fall, & was more anxious about the professor's place; for though sound doctrine doctrine in the University was of much use, yet English preaching was like to worke more, and win more soules to God.

He always highly vallued and frequently consulted with Mr. Dod, who persuaded him that English preaching was that wherein God was more immediately served; he said there were others that might supply the University in the Professor's place, that either could not, or would not labour for men's conversion. The Master of Sidney College, Dr. Ward, a vast schollar, was then in vieu & nomination for the Professor's place. Yet Mr. Preston was so solicited by honest men to hold it that he knew not what to doe. Two things he thought he wanted to enable him, the one was a Latine tongue, the other a Latine stile; in both wth, by reason of desuetude, he was unready in. For his style, therefore, he resolves upon an an exact & logical analysis of all the epistles, w\textsuperscript{th} would actuate and exercise his style, & acquaint him w\textsuperscript{th} the Scripture phrase & language, and which, if he were called to be professor, might serve for lectures in the schooles. This worke he imediately applyed himselfe unto, and very happily compleated; a great worke of paines unto him, & in itselfe of great worth; but being Latin & written only w\textsuperscript{th} his owne ill hand, was not thought popular enough to come abroad, and so lyeth in the darke.

For the exercise of his Latin tongue he resolves a journey into the Netherlands, where he should have much occasion of speaking Latin, & so see those Colleges and universityes. But there was no traveyling beyond sea without a license under ye hands of Privy Counsellors; this he procures amonget his friends w\textsuperscript{th} all ye secrecy that could be, and a great while before he he meant to use it, that he might coceale it from ye college & University.
But this his secrecy begat suspition that there was some plot, and it was resented so much ye more because no clergyman was made acquainted wth it.
The opinion was, that something was brewing against Episcopacy. This they were sure of, that Amsterdam was in the Netherlands, and ever had bin fa-tall to the Hierarchy.

truth & try all Tenents; and accordingly was courted by them very much, and solicited to be a Papist, to wch end they gave him very many Popish bookes; and so he came backe to Kent, & to ye college at the time appointed; unknowne to any of ye College, but only to one of his pupils from whom he seldom concealed anythinge. He was no sooner setled in ye college, but a rumour flyes abroad that Mr. Preston had bin beyond the seas; he shewed them that it was incredible, & woundred at their silyness, that they would believe so unlikely a relation. The matter was not great now all was past, & so it rested doubtfull & undetermined.

He had a long tyme beene successfull in pupils, but Dr. Davenant’s leaving of ye college troubled him. A great tutor hath much occasion to use the Master’s influence, for accomodation & advancement of his pupils, wth now he he saw he could not promise unto himselfe. And it fell out much about this tyme, that Doctor Dun, Preacher of Lincoln’s Inn, dyed; when some in that society proposed yt Mr. Preston might be tryed whether he were willing to accept of that place for Tearme tyme. He was himselfe neither careless nor cracking of his good name, “Famae nec incuriosus nec venditator,” but it was much growne by reason of his success in the conflicts & encounters he had at court.

It was some refreshing unto honest men, that Mr. Preston, so resolute & constante in ye ways of God, was yet the Prince’s Chaplaine; and it suited with him to have an oppportunity to exercise his ministry in a considerable & intelligent congregation; were he was assured many Parlam’t men, & others of his best acquaintance would be his hearers; & where, in Tearme time, he should should be well accommodated; so he consented & undertook the place. The chapple then was very little, and at first the numbers that attended on his ministry, besides their own society, were few; but when the chapple was new built, as now it is, the numbers were exceeding great that were his constant hearers, & foundations layd that will not easily be ruined.

This was some ease to his grieved mynde, for Dr. Davenant's leaving of ye college & University; but fitted not his great capacity & lardge desire of doing good. The College he gave over in his thoughts, but not the University, where his preaching was much resented and made great impressions; and though at Lincoln's Inn he had gownmen to be his hearers, yet they were not like to propogate & spread it. A preacher in the University doth generate "Patres," begets begetters, & transmits unto posterity terity what God is pleased to reveale to him. In a word, doth what the Apostle doth enjoyn, 2 Tim. 2. 2. Thus Mr. Preston thirsted after opportunityes of doing service; and might say with the Spouse, that he was sick of love, Cant. 2. 5.

Some of the fellows of Emanuel College were very eminent for pts & learning, & yet clowded & obscured (as they thought) by an oppinion that lay upon the college, that they were Puritans; that is, not only godly and religious, for so they were, & were content to be esteemed, but Non-conformists, and averss to government; for wth cause there had bin lately some alteration made, both in their chapple and manner of diet. They thought, therefore, that, if they could prevaiule wth Dr. Chaderton their present master to resigne (who was established in it by ye founder, and named in ye statute, but growne very old, & had outlived many of those great relations w'th he had before), they might phaps procure that Mr. Preston might succeede him, & bring ye college into reputation. For Mr. Preston was a good man (though a courtier), the Prince his chapline, & very gratious with ye Duke of Buckingham. But this was sooner said than done.

The old Doctor was exceeding wary & jealous, not only of his owne disparagement, but especially of the good & welfare of that brave foundation, that had growne & flourished under his government so long. For, if it were but knowne that he were out, there were divers lay in wayt to get a mandate & come in against the mynds of the fellows. A fresh example whereof they had lately seen in their next neighbor Christ's college, where, after Mr. Pemberton was chosen, Dr. Carew, Deane of of Exeter, was imposed on them, & did all he could to mould anew and alter the constitution and genius of the college. Therefore, one of ye fellows answered that this might be better hindered & prevented while he was alive then at his deafe; for his resignation might be carryed privately, but his death could not; and, if all ye fellows were agreed, the election might be past before the resignation was discovered; & so they promissed to sound & try the judgement of the other fellows, and then repaire againe to him.

There were two things in ye college that (in their opinions) greatly pintched them, the one was the statute of attendance & continuance while they were fellows, so that they had not opportu- nityes to live in noblemen’s howses, or take lectures to exercise their ministry, & make themselves knowne unto such as had it in their power to prefer them. Another Another was the statute of departing at such a standing, whether they were provided or no; and there was then a fresh example in Docto'r Traverse, a man of great worth, yet forced to sojourne as a fellow comoner in Christ's College untill he could be better accomodated. The fellows therefore were easily induced to affect this change, for they thought that Mr. Preston might be an instrument, by reason of his great acquaintance, either to get some mitigation of the statute, or procure more livings to be annexed to the college for their preferment.

So they returned to the old man, and told him that ye fellows were all agreed, and ready to doe what he should prescribe, and that it rested now in him to prevent ye danger that did threaten, not only them in their particular concernements, but the growing good & welfare also of ye college. The poore old old man knew not what to doe; to outlive the mastership he thought was to outlive himselfe, & to goe into his grave alive; yet he honoured & loved Mr. Preston very much, and could not answer that dilemma of ye college safely; therefore, he told them he would not be wanting to ye College good; but it concerned them as well as himselfe to provide that they were not cheated, & another forced on them, whether they would or not; and, therefore, desired that Mr. Preston might be requested to deale with his friends at Court, & procure some promise that there should be no mandate granted in case his resignation should be knowne.

He told them likewise how unprovided he was for maintenance when that was gone, & how unseemly it would be for him now in his old age to want, and, therefore, in this particular desired he might be taken into consideration.

sideration. But Mr. Preston quickly eased the old man of all these feares, by procuring a L^re to him from the Duke of Buckingham in these wordes.

"I have moved his Ma^tie concerning Master Preston's succeeding of you in the mastership of Emanuel college; who is not only willing, but also graciously pleased to recomend him to ye place in especiall manner before any other; so that in making this way for him, you shall doe a very acceptable thinge to his Ma^tie: as also to the Prince, his master, of wh I am likewise to give notice; and, to put you out of all doubt that another may be imposed on you, you shall not neede to feare any thinge in reguard that from his Ma^tie there will be no hindrance to his succession.

"And for that point of supply of maintenance, I shall (as I promised) take care care for to procure it, when fit occasion shall be offered; so, taking kindly what you have done, I rest

"GEORGE BUCKINGHAM.

"Theobalds, Sep. 20. 1662."

When the Doct^ had received & read this letter, he was in all thinges satisfied as to the Court; but they all knew that Dr. Traverse lay in wayt for thispreferment; for, beingouted by the statute of Emanuel college, he soujourned as a fellow Comoner at Christ's College, & presumed, either by his friends at Court to get a mandate, or be chosen in y^e college by a pty of y^e fellows whom he thought his owne; therefore great care was taken to keepe all secret; and though y^e Statute doe ordaine a vacancy of seaven days, & notice by a schedule passed upon the Chapple doore; yet, such was the concurrent uniforme agreement of all the fellows, that it was not discovered to any of the schollars, untill untill the day of election; &, because there is a sacrament to be imediately before it, they were constreyned to lock upp all the gates, that none might come in nor out till it was past; and then two of ye fellows were dispatched to Queen’s College, to acquaint Mr. Preston wth what they had done, & to desire that at two of ye clock he would repaire to ye college to be ad- mitted, & undertake the charge.

It was strange newes at Queen’s, and all ye college were much affected wth it, woundring extremely that so great a transaction should be carryed wth so much secrecy, & that amonge Mr. Preston’s twelve disciples (as they called them) there should be never a Judas, but all concenter in it. But there was order given presently that all ye schollars should be ready against two of ye clock that day to attend Mr. Preston & the fellows to Emanuel Col- lege, lege, in habits suitable to their several qualityes; where was done accordingly, and a very great company attended him from Queen's to Emanuel, where they were cheerfully received & entertained according to the custome, with a generous and costly banquet; and then returned to Queen's againe, but left Mr. Preston, the prop & glory of it, at Emanuel.

In the plantation of Emanuel College at the first, the godly founder tooke great care to store his Colledge with Godly and able fellows from all other colleges, & some were after added that were eminent; but, now a master is bestowed; God in mercy hath enabled that good society to pay their debts, by sending not only members, but also heads into very many of the other colleges; so as they may well now say, "Quæ Regio in terris nostri non plena Laboris."

Sr Walter Mildemay, their noble & religious founder, was wont to say unto his friends that he had set an acorne that might phaps in tyme become an oake. And, blessed be God, our eyes have seen it not only growne & flourishing, but fruitfull; seasonable showers (a great promotion unto a new plantation), and earnest prayers unto God (a speciall meanes to bring these downe), have in these last yeares returned unto this college a glorious harvest. To God be praise!

This newes ran swiftly all ye kingdom over, & was received as men were affected; good men were glad yt honest men were not abhorred as they had bin at ye court, & presaged much of that enlarggement & deliverance we have lived to see. Ye Courtiers made full account that he was theirs, & would mount up from one step to another untill he were a Prelate; especially the the Duke of Buckingham, who, from this tyme, seemed much to affect him, thinking he had given earnest, and could not be defrauded of his purchase of him. The Earl of Pembrook & Countess of Bedford also had a great interest in him, & he in them. In short all men looked on him as a rising man, & respected him accordingly.

As for Lincoln's Inn, they made account they had a speciall influence into this honour, as having first expressed their good opinion of him; and there was an honest godly old man, Master Ayres, one of the Benchers there, that, upon hearing of the newes, would needes be young againe, and make an anagram on his name, though he was uncerteine how he writ it in Latin, for he had seene it written divers wayes; being, therefore, resolute, & loath to miss it, he resolves to write it both wayes; as he that used to say his prayers prayers in Latin & English, that both might not faile; and so first he writ it, "Johannes Prestonius," with this anagram *,—

"En stas pius in honore," and this distich, "Doctrina ingenium virtus tuae præmia poscunt, En dedit Emanuel, stas in honore pius."

But, lest he should be mistaken, he writes Johannes Prestonus with this anagram,—

"Se nosse non turpia," and this distich, "Turpia non novisse, bonum, se nosce beatum, Ista doces alios, sed prius ipse facis."

The rest of the society rejoiced that their lecturer was Master of Emanuel; & tooke occasion to express it, according to their severall relations & dispositions, when he came to them in the Terme wch shortly followed.

There
Doctr Preston.

There was one thing in the college statutes with greatly troubled him, and that was, that the master's absence from the college was confined to a month in every quarter; and he saw not how he could attend at court, & preach at Lincoln's Inn in Tearme time, but he should transgress; but the fellows soone agreed to an interpretation that absolved him from the rigid sense; there being in the statute a double liberty; first, that in case of violent detention it should not hold; they resolved that not only a naturall, but also a morall violence was to be understood; the other was, that in case of College business he should not be esteemed absent.

Now the college at that tyme was in suite for a living in the West, of good vallue, with one Mr. Ewins, a gentleman in the parrish, who had bred up a younger son to be a schollar in relation to that living; & therefore contended tended for it, as if it had beene his owne inheritance; and, when he was worsted at Comon Law, prefers a Bill in Chancery, & thought by mony to carry it against the College right. Bishop Williams, Lord Keeper then, was his great friend, and when, after many delayes, it came to hearing, he would not allow the Counsell for ye College to speake. Mr. Preston, being present, craved leave to speake in the cause himselfe, but was not only syllenced, but severely reprehended for it.

It was Trinity Terme, & the Plague very hot in London, so that Michelmas Terme was wholy adjourned, and the next Terme was proclaymed at Redding, & ye Records removed thither; but, before that, the Lord Keeper was removed from his throne, and Sr Thomas Coventry, one of ye college Counsell that were not permitted before to speake, succeeded him; by whose integrity integrity & justice the College were restored to their right, w^th ever since they enjoyed; and so Mr. Preston's following of the College business excused his absence all this time.

Being, therefore, now established, and greatly mynding ye good thereof, he observed that the schollars had kept Acts but seldome, and accordingly when they came unto it, pformed it but meanly; he, therefore, advised w^th the Fellows in it, and, after many consultations, it was resolved that the number of Acts should be in a manner doubled, of those under Masters of Art; w^ch was a great advancement to learning of all sortes in the college. About this tyme Sr Arthur Chichester, afterwards an Irish Baron, was chosen to goe Embassador into Germany about the Palatinate Affaires, & Mr. Preston was by the Duke of Buckingham and other friends designed to goe along with him; he did not greatly greatly fancy the employment, yet would not contradict it. Only it was considered that though he was the Prince's Chaplin & master of a college, yet he was not Doctor, with they thought might sound ill abroad, and reflect upon his Master. There was not tyme enough to goe unto this business in the ordinary way of Acts & exercises, therefore a mandate was sent to the Vice Chancellor & Heads, that, for as much as Mr. Preston was to wayte upon the Lord Ambassador, & could not in so short a tyme performe his Acts, he should be forthwith admitted Dr. in Divinity, that he might be ready to attend the service; which was done accordingly with all alacrity.

Being, therefore, thus engaged, & not knowing what might befall him in ye voyage, he resolved to settle his temporall estate before he went; he was not willing to be accounted rich, & would often say, "Manifestus thesaurus cito cito expenditur;" & therefore, though he had great incombs from his pupils, & was not prodigal, yet he was not master of his mony; for he had bin advised to adventure in the East India Company, then newly set up, & because that estates there were the more invisible, he was the willinger; but by that means wanted money, for there was paying for many yeares, but no retornes; yet there was hope it might at last come in, and so it did without diminution of the principle, yet not in his life tyme. He therefore thought it needful to make a legal disposition of his estate by will, and so he did, and named a very honourable person his executor, who lived to enjoy that mony, as well other, by virtue thereof.

But the voyadge came to nothing, for Sr Arthur did not goe as he intended; yet this was Doctr Preston's last will, & according to it all was enjoyed; joyed; though he made additions by way of request or direction, wch were accordingly performed.

It was ever Doct' Preston's ambition not to be mercenary in his ministry, but at liberty to preach where he might doe most good, without relation or respect to wages; and he considered that the master of Emanuel could have no living that had cure of soules annexed. He, therefore, was willing to give eare unto ye sollicitations of ye townesmen, who greatly pressed him to be their Lecturer at Trinity church.

They had applied themselves formerly to Dr. Andrews, Bishop of Ely, and propounded unto him Mr. Jefferyes as lecturer, one of ye fellows of Pembroke Hall; who gave admittance, and Mast' Jefferyes preached there for some yeares; Mr. Jefferyes, however, was desireous of a more settled condition, and desired desired Dr. Preston to procure him to be chaplin to some noble man, that was like to helpe him to a living; w^ch was a very easy thinge for the Docter to doe; who, accordingly, presented him to Marquess Hamilton, and accepted him with much respect, as well for Dr. Preston’s sake as his owne. Nor was it long before a living fell, w^ch was the Rectory of Dunmow in Essex, w^ch the Marquess procured, & bestowed upon his chaplin, Mr. Jeffereys; and by that means the Lecture at Trinity was shortly to be voyd.

The townsmen at Cambridge made account they now had what they desired, namely an opp^tunity to settle Dr. Preston in the Lecture at Trinity; & great care was taken to encrease the stypend from fifty pounds a yeare to fower score, that the Dr. might have £20 a quarter paid to him, as thinking the former inconsiderable, & not knowing what principles the Dr. lived by; and when they had effected that, they employed some of the chiefe to propose the matter to the Dr. very sollemnely; who was easily persuaded to accept their offer, without relation to the stipend.
But there was one of ye fellows of Sidney College, Master Middlethwaite, that put in for it; and, though none of the contributors or townsmeen sided wth him, yet he procured letters from the Bishop of Ely, & engaged all his friends both in ye Court and University; so that it came unto a very great contest.

Dr. Preston, who was offered any Bishoprick he would resolve on, & told at Royston by the Duke of Buckingham that ye Bishoprick of Glocester was then voyd, contends wth Mr. Middlethwaite to be Lecturer of Trinity church, for a stypend of fower score pounds a yeare, as the upshot of all his hopes, & fruit of all his great atchievements at Court.
The contention was so great on all sides that it could not be concluded by any mediation, but was referred to a hearing at Royston, before King James, who was really against the Dr.'s preaching in the University; the consequence whereof Doct'r Preston well saw, & was informed fully of. I confess I often wondered why Mr. Middlethwaite, an eminent schollar, and like enough to get preferment, as afterwards it's knowne he did, should stickle for so small an opportunitie to preach, against the inclination & disposition of y^e townsmen; untill I understood that he was set on by y^e Prelaticall Heads, who told him that it was a service acceptable to the King, & he should be rewarded for it. At the tyme appointed it came unto a hearing, and an argument urged against the Docter that it was a lecture mainteyned by six-pences, a thinge unseemely for a master of a college, & the Prince's Chaplin.

But the Duke had taken care that nothing should be ordered & concluded against y^e Dr.'s minde; for the Duke resolved not to loose him. So the meeting was dissolved, and nothing done.

But that night Sr Edward Conoway, then Secretary, invited Dr. Preston to supp, and after supper, told him that the King had ordered him to tell him that if he would give over his psuance of that lecture, & let the Heads dispose of it, he should make his choyce of any other preferment that was more honourable and profitable for him. But the Dr.'s end was to doe good, not to get goods; the King's to make him useless & divide him from the Puritans. The Duke was more indifferent, who laboured in him to win & gratify the Puritans, whose power in Parliament was now growne very formidable. Therefore, when nothing else would content him, he was confirmed Lecturer at Trinity nity church; the last preferment he ever had; where he preached afterwards all his tyme, & did much good.

The Duke had now obleiged Dr. Preston, in the judgement & opinion of all the honest pty, & much displeased the Prelaticall; & he saw, apparently, that King James approved not his siding wth him; yet was he more express than ever in his affections to him, and freeness wth him.

He had indeed a very happy & rare composure of sweetness and sollidity; would play and dally wth ye king as if he were a woman; and yet enquire & apprehend & argue counsels & debates of state, as if a Burleigh or a Walsingham. He saw clearely that the affections of ye king were fading, wth the Puritans though never so much his friends could not repaire. He, therefore, eyed & adored ye rising sun, who now was growne growne & fit for marriage, and yet made no preparatives to find a Consort for him. He knew ye Spanish match was but a couler and a treaty dandled betweene Bristol and King James, to foole the Prince off, & shut his eares against the French proposals. This he discovers to the Prince, & tells him ye Kings did not love an heyre apparent, how neere soever; that the daughter of Spaine was designed to a monastery, and kept in reserve for the Howse of Austria; that in France there was a lady much before her, and, if he pleased, he would wayt upon him into Spaine in a disguise, & take the French court in their way, & see that Lady, & so discover Bristol's & his Father's jugling. The Prince re-sents, and hugs the overture; they tell King James, that the Earl of Bristoll and the Spanish ministers abased him; that it was tyme to bringe that treaty to a conclusion, and desire they might goe into Spaine & play the game out.

The King saw who had ploughed with his heyfer, & feared (as he was apt to doe) a cheque-mate; yet for the present urgeth only his affections to them both, and asketh how he should subsist so long without their companies. But they persisting, the King signes a warrant with his owne hand, for Jack Smyth, and Tom Smyth, with each of them a servant & their horses, to goe beyond sea.

The Duke, even now, was not unmyndfull of Dr. Preston; and, therefore, leaves order with ye Duchess, & Countess of Denbigh, to be carefull for him; & Sir Ralph Freeman, having a child to baptize, Doctr Preston is intreated for to preach. The Dutchess & Countess were both gossips, who shewed to the Dr. very great respect, & gave him hopes of doing good; & some good he did; for he procured by their meanes Master Hildersham's liberty, & restitution to his place at Ashby De La Zouch; and gave gave great hopes unto good ministers of fairer tymes than had bin formerly. Only he would relate, with much regret, that he often found Dr. Lawd, then Bishop of St. David's, with the Duchess and Countess, & therefore doubted of ye issue & event.

The Doctor saw, by the debates about the Lecture, that he had enimyes as well as freinds at Court. He knew that the Duke was mutable as well as mortal; also that the King abhorred that journey into Spaine, & would remember it if able; "Dulcis inexperto, cultura potentis amici, expertus metuit." Therefore, though now he was settled & assured in the University, yet would he not leave his lecture at Lincoln's Inn; but, being still in London in the Termyme about the College business, continued preacher at Lincoln's Inn, and thought it might be a good reserve in case the naughty heads or factions in in the court should fall upon him. It was well he did this, for the Prince & Duke returned the next Octobr highly offended wth ye Spanish gravity, & both they & all their traine did nothing but tell stories of the Spanish baseness. So a Parliamt was called, & the Duke was cryed up by all the Godly pity in the kingdome. The Spanish agent at the Court had order from his master, out of Spaine, for to defy him, & protest against him at the Councell table; but, seriously, he could not have done him a greater courtesy, for the people did universally hate ye Spaniard, and now he became the people's martyr. I have seen verses made in his defence & comendation. And now Agents were presently dispatched into France to treate of that match.

King James liked not this stuffe, but the Prince was able now to goe alone, especially having the Duke for one of his his supporters. All things now are fairly carried for Religion, as represented by the Duke of Buckingham's, the Prince's and the people's favourite. The people seemed now to have the better, & ye Court affairs for to decline and droop. Dr. Preston, like another Mordecai, was very great, for the Prince was his master, & the Duke his friend; and ye courtiers had their eyes upon him, because they saw he came not thither for preferment, as all men else did. His honours altered nothing in him, but gave encouragement to all the godly pty, & his sermons at Lincoln's Inn much wrought upon the Parliament. A bold petition was now contrived & presented to the King at Whitehall, from both Houses of Parliament, April 1624, against the spreading & increase of Popery, & the Indulgence given unto Priests and Jesuits.

King James was in the evening of his glory, glory, his party in ye Court under a clowd, another sun almost in vieu, and the daystar already risen. Therefore accordingly, he answered warily to their petition, bewayled his want of information as to the real ground of this their trouble, wth otherwise he had prevented; acknowledg'd that whilst the treaty lasted wth Spaine & Austria he was obliged to comply, but now both being broken off, he would be rigid & severe against ye Priests & Jesuits. He bids them finde out a way to restreyne the growth of Popery, and he would second them. But resolves secretly he would pay the Duke of Buckingham for all this; and gives order to the Earle of Bristoll to prepare an information for that end. Howsoever the match wth France, & other intervenient accidents obstruct the King's designs for ye present.

The Duke, having told tales out of schoole schoole, & broken off ye match wth Spaine, was much obleiged to further & promote ye French; wch he did seriously excuse to Dr. Preston, upon this ground, that there was not a Protestant to be had, and to marry wth a subject had always bin unhappy and fatall to ye Kings of England. He also argued that the French would not be so rigid in religious observations. The Dr., however, constantly opposed, only acknowledged this difference, that Spanish Popery was an absolute ingredient to their intended Western Monarchy, but French was not so, & in so much, was less evill.

The French, on their part, found out how the land lay, & were untractable, unless the Duke would ayde the King of France against the Rochellers. This was a hard chapter for one so much obleiged to the Puritans; therefore, he declyned all he could; but nothing would serve. The Duke knew King James James lay ready to take advantages; so, in conclusion, eight shipps were granted to oppose the Rochell Fleece; & many colours were sought to clowd it, & hide it from the world. But from that tyme Dr. Preston doubted of ye saintship of ye Duke of Buckingham, whom otherwise he honoured and loued very much. It was truly high tyme for the Duke to looke about him, for King James was not to learne now how to play his game; he was an old, but not a foolish king, Eccles. 4. 13. and, therefore, fayled not to lay rods in brine, that he might use upon occasion.

Kings used for to account an ague in the Spring their physique, yet physique till March be past is not good; but this ague of which we treat antidates the months, & comes in February. The King was then at Theobalds, and the ague which attacked him was made but small account of. He feared death, but was was the most impatient and disordered of any living man, for what rules soever the Physicians gave he would observe none; with intemperance might well occasion the growing strength & vigour of the disease; and, in good truth, it more & more increased, & at last began to be considerable; he now began to take advise, & to submit to rules; but then it was too late; for March 27. 1625, on the Lord's Day, the King dyed. Dr. Preston then attended in his month, and was sometimes hastened to the Prince to comfort him, and sometimes to the Duke; and indeed it was a very mournfull morning. Death is a very serious thinge, & knocks alike at Palaces as at the meanest cottage.

King James was very much beloued of all his servants; some of the huntsmen could not be gotten from him. The Prince and Duke were both of them retyred, & wept exceedingly. And now Sr
Edward Conway & some of the Lords drew up a writing, & proclaymed Charles Steward King, wth all his titles; and hast was made to pack away to London. The Prince, & Duke, & Dr. Preston, in coaches shut downe, hasten to Whitehall; & there the Prince is proclaymed againe, wth more formallityes; & the Lord Maior & ye Citty sent to, where the proclamation was done wth much solemnity, & great rejoicing of the people; for the Prince had that exceeding happiness as to come upon the stage unprejudiced; for he had never interposed or acted but in the Spanish business, and that succeeded to his great advantage; so that if he listed he might have been as popular as ever any were.

This occasions many alterations in Court; the Bishops, generally, and Doct' Preston's enimyes, and all that had contended wth the Duke, were crest-fallen. King James was like enough to
to have outlived the Duke of Buckingham, who had bin very sick since his returne from Spaine; but all is altered, & ye Duke doth all.

But he had many things to doe; the affronts received at Madrid & at the counsell table by the agent, were to be sent back by a puissant & mighty navy, & provisions made accordingly;
King James to be interred; a Parliament to be summoned; the French Lady to be sent for, & brought into England; with the Duke especially intended, & spake to all the gallants of his retinue to attend him; & to many others of ye gentry & nobility throughout the kingdome; but he found it hard thus in the morning of the King's affaires to be abroad; there being then a Parliament, & the sickness much encreasing in ye City; so he was con-streyned to employ the Earle of Holland, and attend himselfe at home.
All were not gratified in this great Revolution & mutation of affaires; & the discontented pty murmured, & let fly at the Duke; & the sickness much encreasing, began to make a mutiny. It was much desired that the Parliament might be prorogued till some other more healthfull & less dangerous tyme; but the Navy against ye Spaniards, and the pressing wants of all sortes that depended on the court would not pmit, so it was only adjourned to Oxford, yet there ye sickness was as soone as they, & some of their members smarted for it; but hast was made to gratify the new King, and the provisions for the navy went forward, many men engaged, and the King resolved to attend that business as admitting no delay.

There was one thinge that invited Dr. Preston to a journey that yeare, and that was a strong suspition that ye plague was in Cambridge, in wþh case there is a liberty to dissolve the college wþthout any detriment to the officers & members of it; he was not willing to omit the oppþtunity because he had many invitations into the West. The Bishop of Salisbury he desired to con- sult withall, about a booke of Mr. Montaigue's that was comended to him by ye Duke of Buckingham to þuse, & give him his sense upon it.

Mr. Chervil, the Recorder of Salisbury, was a Bencher of Lincoln's Inn, and a very good friend of his; he had also divers friends at Dorchester, & was desirous to be sea-sick, & was still inticed forward; and at last resolved to wait upon ye King & Duke at Plymouth, whither they were gone to see the navy set sayle. Whilst he was there, the Rochell fleete was broaken by those ships the King lent, & Mounseiur Sa- beeza came into Falmouth wþh the re- mainder, mainder, & thence to Plymouth, with most lamentable outcries against the Duke; who seemed to be very much affected with it, and made mighty promises of wonderfull repaires. But Dr. Preston fayled not to set that business home, he did believe the Duke was overruled to send them, and sorry when he saw ye sad effects.

But while the Duke was thus deteyned in the west, the Earle of Bristol, and ye Lord Keeper Williams combined against him, and drew in many to their pity; amonge others ye Earle of Pembrooke, & divers great ones in ye Howse of Commons; and were so encouraged & heartned in it, that ye Earle of Bristol, May 1. 1626, preferred in the Howse of Commons twelve articles against the Duke of Buckingham; tending to prove that the Duke had promised unto the Pope & minister of Spaine, to make the King a Papist, & overrule him against against the judgement of the Earle of Bristol; to write unto the Pope wth the title of "Sanctissime Pater;" that his carriage in matters of religion was such, that he stucke not to kneele before the Host, as often as he met it; that he was so licentious and unchaste in his behaviour, that the Spanish ministers resolved not to have anythinge to doe wth him; that when he could not bring about the match to his owne particular advantage, he used means to obstruct it and breake it off; that he (the Earl of Bristol) had informed King James of these thinges, who promised to heare him, & to leave the offender to justice; and that not many dayes before his sickness.

The Duke had now reason to looke about him, and was very able so to doe; first he labours to divide the pty by drawing off of ye Earle of Pembrook, by promising his daughter to the Earle of of Montgomerye's son; whch afterwards he did accomplish; then he endeavoured to obleige ye Puritans by gratifying of Dr. Preston all the wayes he could; & particularly in the college suite, by depriving Bishop Williams of ye seale, & giving it to Sr Thomas Coventry, who was one of ye college Counsell; yea, he went so far as to nominate the Doctor to be Lord Keeper; & the King was so firme to him, that the Earl of Bristol could doe no good, and so withdrew his articles.

Dr. Preston's friends were newters all this while, & looked on, neither engaged for him, nor against him; whch was sadly represented to the Duke by the Bishop and that pty, who woundred that he should doate upon a man that either could not or would not owne him in his neede; bad him consider whether Puritans were like to be his friends, whose wayes were "toto caelo" different; different; and told him plainly he could not have them both; if he adhered to those that sought their ruyne, they must adhere to those as would support them; so that the Duke was in a great strait, & knew not what to doe.

Dr. Preston also was importuned to put it to an issue, and if the Duke would not leave the rotten and corrupted clergy, then to leave him; and because there had bin information against that booke of Mr. Montague's, they propounded it might come to a debate, and not remaine, as now it did, unsetled.

The Doctor & ye Duke were both of them unwilling to open a breach; loued to temporize & wayt upon events; but Dr. Preston's friends, would not be satisfied, but urged a conference; whereunto they were encouraged by some orthodox & very learned Bishops; and at at last it was concluded, by two religious noblemen, that a conference there should be; the Bishop of Rochester, & Dr. White, then Deane of Carlile, on the one side; and the Bishop of Coventry & Lichfield & Dr. Preston on the other; a day was set, a Saturday in Hillary Terme at 4 of ye clock in the afternoone, the place was York Howse, & Dr. Preston sent to in the morning to attend it.

The noblemen came to the Bishop's lodgings about two of the clock; who sent for Dr. Preston to them, who gave many reasons why he could not goe; but they were resolute, & taking ye Bishop with them, went without him; but the Dr. considering, & fearing his absence might betray the cause, & give encouragement unto the other side, went afterwards himselfe unto the place, & sat by as a hearer silent, untill all was done.

But,
But, talking afterwards occasionally of falling from grace, the Bishop shewed that a Godly man might goe farr & yet retorne, by the instance of yᵉ prodigal, Luke 15. But Doctor White exclaimed against any that should think the prodigall in acts of drunkenness & whoredome not to be fallen from Grace; and urged that of Rom. i. 23. that those that doe such things are worthy of death; that is, said he, in a state of everlasting death, & therefore, fallen from grace. So, i Cor. 6. 9. 10. shall not inherit the kingdome of God; that is, are not sons, for if sons, then heyres, Rom. 8. 17.

But Dr. Preston answered, that those sins indeed made a forfeiture of their interest into the hands of God, & He might take yᵉ seysure if He pleased; yet did not unto those that were His children & in covenant wᵗʰ Him; as two tenants, not paying of their rent, or keeping keeping covenants, forfeited their leases; yet the Lord might seize the one, and not ye other, as He pleased. But the Bishop & the Deane both cryed that this was the way to all licentiousness & looseness; to which the Dr. answered, that the seed of God, as the apostle calls it, 1 John 3. 9. remained in the sinning saint or son, & would repaire him; as in water there remains a principle of cold even when it Boyleth over, that will undoubtedly reduce it when the heate & fire is removed; as in Peter, David, Sampson, & others was apparent, so that they could not run out into all licentiousness, for the spirit lusted against ye flesh, that they cannot doe the thinges they would, Gal. 5. 17.

He did not disinherit them, and blot their names out of the Booke of Life, Phil. 4. 3. yet He might & would withdraw His fav'r & imbitter all their comforts, comforts, Mat. 26. 75. raise troubles to them from their dearest interests, 2 Sam. 12. 11. and fill them with anguish; Psal. 38. 3. 4. which in reason will keep them from running out, seeing the evil is comensurable unto that good of pleasure or profit their sin afforded; and, if neede be, He can add unto it eternall apprehensions, and make them feel the fierceness of His anger, Psal. 88. 6. 7. without any hope of being eased; and after this can restreine & withhold them, as he did Abimilech, Gen. 20. 6. For, if one cease to be a sonne because he comits a sin that doth deserve eternall death, Rom. 6. 23. and because in many thinges we offend all, James 3. 2. we should be always out of sonship, & have neither certeinty nor comfort in our estate; unless he could give some ground out of Scripture to assure what sinnes puts us out & what doth not.

The Duke had sent to Doctor Preston

ton to decline this clashing conference, and assured him that he was as much his friend as ever, & would have stopt it if he could, but the Bishops had overruled it; w\textsuperscript{th} the Dr. at first beleieved, and so was backward; but when he saw the confidence of Dr. White and his companion, he doubted the sincerity of that assurance; and was afterwards informed that there had bin a meeting at the Countess of Denbigh's, & the Duke had promised to leave him. This gave him resolution & encouragement against the second conference, w\textsuperscript{th} was managed in a manner by him alone against Mr. Montague & Dr. White; for when the Dr. saw that ye Duke doubled w\textsuperscript{th} him, he was less fearefull to offend him; though the Duke still carried it w\textsuperscript{th} all ye faireness he could, & appeared not in prison.

When the time came for the second conference, the Dr. readily appeared; and the Dr.'s resolve to dispute notwithstanding.
and the first thing he charged Mr. Montague with was his Doctrine of Traditions, which he affirmed he had delivered as grossly & erroniously as any Papist. Gag. Page 38. 39. 40. For he justified that place in Bazil, where he saith the Doctrine retained in ye Church was delivered, partly by written instructions, partly by unwritten traditions, having both a like force unto piety. Which was so unlike unto Bazil, and the opinions of those tymes, that it was generally beleeved to be put in by the Papists of later tymes.

Master Montague confessed it was suspected by some of ye preciser cut; but Dr. Preston told him that Bishop Bilson was none of them, yet he did judge it supposititious; & it must be so, or else Bazil acknowledged to be erro- nious; moreover, he instanced the praying towards the East, & the use of Crisme or oyle in baptisme; both which being being rejected by the Church of England, argues that the Church holds y't place in Bazil not canonical.

Master Montague answered, that the sense of the assertions there used by St. Bazil might signify that some things that seemed true, albeit of less esteeme & consequence, might be delivered by tradition; as long as matters more substantiall were taken from ye Scriptures. But Dr. Preston shewed that the assertions signified oftentimes doctrine, and were used heere by Bazil to denote those heads of doctrine that were more principle & less exposed, comparing them unto those places in the Temple, whereunto the people had not access. Master Montague answered further that his assertion was hypothetical, and that if a doctrine came from the same au-thour it was no great matter whether it were by writing or word of mouth, for either had ye same authority. But Dr. Preston Preston told him that Bazil was positive, and spake directly, and therefore could not be hypotheticall, as he pretended.

It is a great step unto victory for to divide; Paul sets ye Pharisees against the Saduces, Acts 23. 7. 8. that he might save himselfe. The Jesuits are so good at it, that though they have but one to be their adversary, they endeavour to divide him from himselfe, by moving passion, or compassion, or some affection of his owne against him. Dr. White had openly in the Commencement Howse mainteyned that election is not "ex prævisis operibus," and therefore Dr. Preston resolved to pintch Mr. Montague in that particular, that he might bereave him of his animating champion Dr. White.

There were fower severall places that Dr. Preston had observed to make good his charge: the first wth he produced was was Gag. Page 179. Some Protestants hold that Peter was saved, because God would have it so, without respect unto his faith & obedience; and Judas damned, because God would have it so, without respect unto his sin; and ironically added, "this is not ye doctrine of the Protestants, this is not the doctrine of the church, the church of England hath not taught it, doth not believe it, hath opposed it." Now Dr. White, who was very fierce & eager to engage, told him it was no doctrine of the church of England, but a private fancy of some, that Judas was condemned without respect unto his sin; for the wages of sin is death, Rom. 6. 23. the soule that sinneth shall dye, Ezek. 18. 4.

But Dr. Preston answered he did not charge that upon Mr. Montague, but the former pte of ye assertion, that Peter was not saved without respect unto his believing & obedience, & so election should should not be absolute, but grounded on faith & workes foreseene. Then, saith Dr. White, I have nothing against that, but leave Mr. Montague to answer for himselfe.

Dr. Preston was glad that he was eased of Dr. White, & yet resolved to make advantage of it; and, therefore, told Dr. White, if he thought election was not "ex fide prævisâ," he desired to know whether saving grace were an effect, or fruit, of election or no? Dr. White readily acknowledged it was. Then said Dr. Preston, whosoever hath saving grace is elected; now you know that an elect person can never finally miscarry, or fall away, therefore, whosoever hath true grace can never fall away.

The old man saw the snare & would have avoyded it by denying the consequence; but the Dr. urged that wheresoever ye effect is, there must be ye cause; but but saving grace is an effect of election. This Dr. White would have denied; but the hearers murmured that the effect could not be without the cause, as the day could not be without the presence of the sun.

Then Dr. White answered that saving grace was an effect indeed, yet but a common effect. Dr. Preston urged that it was not more common than election, for all the elect had saving grace, & none but they; and, therefore, they could never fall away; but this, said he, is by the way, I will now apply myself to Mr. Montague.

But when Mr. Montague perceived that Dr. White, his great Goliah, forsooke him, he was greatly troubled, & cavilled at the words awhile; but, the booke adjudging it for Dr. Preston, he said that the church of England had not declared any thinge against it. Dr. Preston alledged ledged the 17th Article, and told Mr. Montague that he affirmed the church of England did oppose it.

But after one of ye Lords whispered wth Mr. Montague, he confessed, as for Arminius, he had never read him; and that he had writ some thinges negligently in that booke; wch he never thought would have bin so scanned amonge friends; and therefore promised to write another booke in butter & honey, and therein more exactly for to acquit himself.

Some of ye Lords proposed that, instead of this booke wch Mr. Montague promised to write, the Synod of Dort might be received & established as the doctrine of the church of England, seeing there was nothing there determined but what our delegates approved. But Dr. White opposed this mainly; for, said he, the church of England, in her chatachisme, chisme, teacheth to beleve in God ye Son, who redeemed me and all mankinde, wth that Synod did deny.

Dr. Preston answered, that by redemption there was only meant the freeing of mankind from that inevitable ruin the sin of Adam had involved them in, and making them savable upon conditions of another covenant. John 3. 16. 17. So that now salvation was not impossible, as it was before the death of Christ; but might be offered unto any man, according to the tenour of that commission, Mark 16. 15. 16. This could not however be applied unto the Divels, for they were left in that forlorn condition whereinto their sin & disobedience put them, Hebrews 2. 16. & 2 Peter 2. 4. On the other hand, the jaylor, Acts 16. 24. 27. was a boysterosus, bloody fellow, yet Paul made no doubt to tell him, verse 31. that, if he beleved in the Lord Jesus, he should be saved wth with his howse. But Dr. White would in no sorte admit this, but affirmed earnestly that Christ dyed for all alike in God's intention and decree; for Cain as well as Abel; for Saul as well as David; for Judas as much as Peter; for the reprobate & damned in Hell as well as for the elect and saints in Heaven.

To which Dr. Preston answered, that there was a speciall salvation offered to beleevers, 1 Tim. 4. 10. That Christ was indeed a ransome for all, 1 Tim. 2. 6. yet the Saviour only of his body, Ephes. 5. 23. That he redeemed all, but called, justified, & glorified, whom he knew before, & had predestinated to be formable to ye image of his son, Rom. 8. 29. 30. That to whom in this sense Christ was given, to them were given also all things appteyning unto life & Godlyness, 2 Pet. 1. 3. As faith, 2 Pet. 1. 1. Phil. 1. 29. Ephes. 2. 8. Repentance, Doctt Preston.

Repentance, Acts ii. 18. 2 Tim. 2. 25. A new heart, Ezek. 36. 26. His Spirit, Gal. 4. 5. 6. So that nothing can be charged on them, Rom. 8. 31. 32. 33. 34. So that they can never perish nor be taken out of Christ's hand, John 10. 28. 29. 30. But as they are begotten again unto a lively hope, 1 Pet. 1. 3. so they are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, verse 5. Whereas Judas was lost, John 17. 12. and is gone to his owne place, Acts 1. 25.

And there are many nations & people of ye world, that have no outward offer made unto them in ye Gospel, Psal. 147. 19. 20. Acts 16. 6. 7. And those that enjoy ye means of grace, have not all hearts given them to understand & believe it, Deut. 29. 2. 3. 4. Isaiah 6. 9. 10. Mat. 13. 13. 14. 15. and therefore they are lost, 2 Cor. 4. 3. 4. and are damned. 2 Thess. 2. 10. 11. 12. He shewed them, in Adam all men were lost, Rom. 5. 12.
5. 12. and none recovered but by Christ; therefore, such as had not Christ's intercession could not recover; That Christ prayed but for some, John 17. 9. and therefore none but such only could be saved, Heb. 9. 15.

Dr. White acknowledged there was a difference; for, though all had so much as by good improvement might serve their turne, yet the elect had more, for God abounded towards them, Ephes. 1. 8. 9. Rom. 5. 15. 17. 20. Thus, by example, all the troope have horses, but the officers have better; two travellers have staves to leape over a ditch, yet ye one a stronger & better than ye other; the worst men had grace enough to keepe corruption & the evil of their nature downe, but the elect such as would doe it easily. Christ had tasted death for every man; Heb. 2. 9. he dyed for those who might notwithstanding prish, 1 Cor. 8. 11. and bought those that that yet might bring upon themselves swift damnation, 2 Pet. 2. 1. because they did not husband & improve ye favour offered to them.

Dr. Preston answered that Christ was in himselfe sufficient to save all; and might be said to be provided for that end & use; as a medicine is to cure infected psions, though it cures none actually but those that drinke it. “Habet in se quod omnibus prosit, sed, si non bibitur, non,” as in 1 Jo^n 5. 11. 12. But many did not thus apply Christ, because they had him not so offered & exhibited as others had, Mat. 11. 21. Luke 10. 13. for God gave some faith & repentance, as I have shewed. The serpent (Moses was commanded to make), was in itselue sufficient to cure those that were bitten, Numb. 21. 8. 9. yet cured none but only those who looked on it. “So, as Moses lifted up the Serpent in the wilderness, shall the Son of Man be lifted lifted up, that whosoever believed in Him should not perish but have everlasting life," John 3. 14. 15.

Dr. White urged that place, Esay. 5. 4. that God had done all he could, but they neglected and rejected the counsel of God against themselves, Luke 7. 30.

Dr. Preston answered, that God had done all that they could challenge of Him, for he had given them in Adam power to be upright, Eccles. 7. 29. and proposed another way in a Mediator; and therefore excuseth his judgment, Isaiah 5. 3. Yet this was then offered unto Israel only; "he had not delt so with any other nation," Psal. 147. 19. 20. Besides he had done what he could, without reversing & rescinding his decree, John 12. 38. 39. 40; for otherwise he could have given them "the same spirit of faith," 2 Cor. 4. 13. "The like guift that he did unto others who beleived in the Lord Jesus," Acts 11. 17. he could have "wrought in them both to will & to doe of his good pleasure," Phil. 2. 13. He could have healed them as he promised, Isa. 57. 18. and as he did persecuting Paul, Acts 9. 17. 18. But God had other ends, Rom. 9. 17. and attributes, Rom. 9. 22. wch he was willing to discover, Prov. 16. 4.

But Dr. White asked, how then God could require faith & repentance? Mark 1. 15. Acts 17. 30. Which was all one as if any should desire a man to give his judgement or opinion of a coulor that had his eyes shut, and then shut his eyes as fast as he could.

Dr. Preston answered that God might doe it to shew and discover our impotency; just so as we bid our little children to rise, that by their owne fault fell, in order to let them know their owne owne inability, & that they may be the more beholding to us to help them up, as Mark 9. 23. 24. And, because the call & comand of Christ is the vehiculum & conduit pipe of strength & power, Acts 14. 10. Joh. 5. 8. 9. & Joh. 11. 43. 44. thus God, by bidding men & comanding them to take Grace, doth thereby fit and enable them ye more to doe it. As ye creature, Acts 3. 6. 7. 8. was by ye comand enabled; also Saul (afterwards called Paul), being comanded to receive his sight, was enabled the same moment to looke upon Ananias, Act 22. 13. who, vers. 16. being comanded to wash away his sins, had the blood of Christ provided ready for to doe it. These comands are not like those the apostle speakes of, James 2. 16. but heere is something given. When God bids He doth not "verba dare sed rem."

But Dr. White further urged that God had had no pleasure in the death of wicked men, Ezek. 33. 11. but much rather that they would repent & leave their sinnes, Ezek. 18. 23. 32. If God, therefore, were not ready to the utmost of his power to give them grace, he could not be excused from dissembling & double dealing.

To wch Dr. Preston answered, that superiours may comand unable sons for many reasons, yet cannot be said to dissemble, unless they refuse to give when the required condition is performed. As, if I bid one come unto me & I will give him sixpence, then if I refuse when he is come I do dissemble, but, if he comes not, he cannot charge me; for his not coming may be for want of will, Jo$ 5. 40. as well as for want of power, Jo$ 6. 44. And if I know a creeple will not come though he could, I may punish him for it.
It's true God delights in nothing but Himself; His joy & comfort is terminated in Himself; not in the creature, but as He is in some way served & represented by it; for God made all things for Himself, Prov. 16. 4. yea for His pleasure, Rev. 4. 11. That is for ye exercise & illustration of some one of His attributes; as His power, Exod. 9. 16. Rom. 9. 17. His wrath, Rom. 9. 22. Never did strong man glory of his strength more than God doth of His sovereignty & omnipotency, Job 40. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13.

Now, if it fall but that, in the illustration & exercise of those his glorious attributes & excellencyes, some creatures smart, yet he delights not in their smart & sufferings, but in ye demonstration of his omnipotency. Ahasuerus makes a feast to all the estates & orders of his kingdome, to show the riches of his glorious kingdome, and ye honour of his excellent excellent Majesty, Hest. 1. 3. 4. This was not done without the smart & suffering of many of ye creatures; yet he delighted not in their sufferings, but in his owne magnificence & bounty. When Christ was at the feast, Jo\textsuperscript{n} 2. 1. 2. he doth condole the death of those innocents that went to make it, yet rejoiced in the good cheere & good will of ye friend that bade him.

There were few present of Dr. Preston's friends; & accordingly, this conference was represented & reported with all the disadvantage that could be to him; insomuch, that many Parliament men that were his friends were much offended at it. This occasioned Dr. Preston, as soone as he came to Cambridge, to write the severall passages of his disputation, & send them to those friends that were unsatisfied. This was all an evidence that ye Duke & Doctor Preston were not so great friends as before, but that that the Duke sticked to the Prelats, and would, in ye issue, leave Dr. Preston & the Puritans; with much abated many men's affections to the Duke. It was believed at the same time that he had no such interest in ye King's affections as he pretended to. They thought his greatness began to languish, and it was believed in the University that there was another favourite in being, though yet obscure.

The Earle of Suffolke much about this tyme dyed, who had bin a long tyme Chancellor of ye University of Cambridge. Great means was used to get ye Duke up to succeed him; but many men were fallen off because of his deserting Dr. Preston, and others did believe his glory was deputed. The Earle of Berkshire, therefore, the former Chancellor's second sonne, was set up against the Duke, and many voted for him that loved greatness, and were servants unto the the tymes, and it is beleeved it had bin carried for him against the Duke, if the wisedome of Dr. Goffing, then Vice Chancellor, and some others who superintended the scrutiny, had not prevented it. So it was pronounced for the Duke, & great care was taken for the investing of him in a very sollemne manner.

Representatives of ye University were designed to attend him at Yorke Howse, in their habits, and a sumptuous feast provided for their entertainement. The Duke sate in the middle of the table amongst the Doctors; where (by somebody) there was a health begun unto ye King. When it came to Dr. Preston for to pledge it, he was uncovered & bowed as others had done, but drunk but very little, & so delivered it unto the next; but one of ye Doctors tooke notice that he drunck not all; and told him he had seene him drinke as great a glass of wine, & did beleeve he could have drunke drunke this if he would, but he loved to be singular. The Dr. acknowledged he was not skilfull in ye lawes of drinking healths, & therefore, if he had offended, desired it might be imputed to his ignorance. He said he thought the end was to shew respect unto ye person named; wch was done best by the ceremonyes that preceded, such as being bare, standing up, & such like; wherein he sayd he had not willingly offended. But, if it were an engine to court intemperance, & to engage men unto greater quantityes than themselves liked, it fell short of that modesty & temperance of the heathens, Esther i. 8. and was a sin in all; but, in men of their degree & ranke, an abominable wickedness.

The Duke misliked this incivillity, & frowned on the Doctor that occasioned it; but, it was beleived it could not have bin done without assurance that the Duke's affections were ebbing towards Dr.
Dr. Preston. And no wonder, for, his end being to make impressions of good upon the court, he could not but see that if they did not succeed they would recoyle. If you manure & sow yo\textsuperscript{r} land, if ye seed subdue it not & conquer it, it is enabled to bring forth ye stronger weeds, Heb. 6. 7. 8. If you cast pearles before swyne they will turne againe & rend you, Mat. 7. 6.

The Duke had now seen ye worth & way of Dr. Preston; he had found that he could not win him & make him his; he could not, therefore, in a way of policy, but labour & resolve to wrack & sinke him. When Herod was called to account by the conquering Augustus, for the great assistance he had given to Marke Anthony his adversary, and knew it would be in Augustus' power to take off his head, he settled his affaires; but gave preemption order that his beloved Marianne should be put to death, for this this only reason, because another should not enjoy so great a beauty. So the Duke would not another should enjoy the great abilityes of Dr. Preston, but was resolved to breake him if he could, yet in a civil court way.

But the Dr. was too knowing not to see this afarr off, Prov. 22. 3. and had accordingly provided a succession of reserves wherein to hide himselfe. The first and surest was his conscience, 2 Cor. 1. 12. "This is our rejoicing, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity & Godly sincerity, not with fleshly wise-dome but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world." If a man be welcome to his conscience, he needs not feare ye storms & blusters that he meets abroad. When a man is forced to be where he would not, as Peter was foretold he should be, Joa 21. 18. yet he may, in despight of them, retire into himselfe.

Paul
Doctr Preston.

Paul made it his business to have his conscience always void of offence, Acts 24. 16. and so did Dr. Preston; for his actings (being many of them above the common size) were not always understood, & very often misinterpreted; yet he was innocent & upright always in them. An undeniable argument whereof was that he never sued for the least preferment, as I have said, but studied & often consulted how, without breaking, he might avoid them.

And, though he lived like himselfe, & gave releefe to others, yet it was ever of his owne, as very many yet alive can witness. Indeed he was a man of very much communion & sweet society wth God; prayed much in private & by himselfe; besides as tutor with his pupils; & often as Master in his family, whatever weakness he was in, or business did occur; kept many private days of fasting by himselfe, especially before before ye Sacrament & Sabbath days; and accordingly enjoyed a constant clearness & assurance of his justification, & interest in ye blood of Christ. Even then when frailtyes & infirmityes did most of all afflict & wound him, he never, that I knew, was troubled or perplexed about adoption, though very often about the impfection of his graces, and the unconstancy of sanctification; so as he studied most exactly that treatise of "the Sts. infirmityes," and there is nothing in all his works that may more properly be called his.

His next retreat was Lincoln's Inn; for now, he said, the Duke was Chancellor, & would endeavour to ingratiate himself & be a Benifactor; he had bought Erpenius' Manuscripts, and did verily intend to found a library; & so it would be easy & in his power to out him of ye college & university; for there was a resolution of some of the fellows to petition petition the Duke to annul ye statute of continuance or commoration in the college. Yet he conceived the lawyers would pretend a kind of freedome & exemption; for he saw when that holy & blessed Dr. Sibbs was oued both of fellowship & Lecture in the university, yet by the goodness and prudence of Sr. Henry Yelverton, that constant patron unto Godly ministers (a virtue yet running in ye veins of his posterity), he was received & reteyned at Grey's Inn unto his death. Therefore, in no sort would he leave his title unto, and interest in, Lincoln's Inn; but reserved it in his power unto his dying day.

Yet he knew the King had long hands, & yt ye Duke's were nothing shorter, and that Lincoln's Inn, though a great deale stronger and better built then Gray's Inn, yet would not hold out long in case the Duke should seriously beleager it; therefore, he considered sidered of removing further off if needs were; and, having weighed all retreats, resolved upon Bazil, in the Switzers' country, as a place with ye longest handed kings had seldom touched, even when it was a receptacle of their greatest enimyes. Therefore he resolved, in case he could not be free in England, to settle there, & spend ye residue of his surviving dayes in writing what he was not suffered to preach, or had not published according to his mynde.

He was naturally very affable and courteous to strangers of any country, &, conversing much with them, endeavoured to preserve his knowledge in ye French & Italian languages. But, after he had thus resolved upon Bazil, he was very friendly to all ye Germans that were dispersed from severall universityes, especially from ye Palatinate; for whom he procured severall sortes of entertainments, both in ye country abroad & in ye y° University; for w°h kindness he had many gratulatory epistles from pticular pssons, especially one of note from the King of Bohemia, under his hand & seale.

But he knew that these were but y° foxe's earths, that might successively be taken and posessed; he, therefore, also thought upon that "Unum magnum" of the Holy Ghost, Prov. 18. 10. "the name of the Lord," that is the goodness, mercy, power of the mighty God; there he was well assured he should for ever be free from Kings & Dukes. Yet these did no way retard his industry in using meanes; obstructions quicken industrious & active myndes, but damp & clogg the dull. There is a statesman of no meane esteeme that writes professedly against the use of cittadels & forts, because it makes the souldier less resolute in engagements; and y° Spartans were forbidden to wall their citty, because it would encourage cowardise.
cowardice. But it did not take off Dr. Preston from his duty, for finding that his standing at court was undermined, he resolved upon buttresses to support him in ye country.

There was in the country of Northampton a gentleman of very able pts, & clear affections to ye publique good, no stranger to ye court in former tymes, nor to ye Duke of Buckingham, with whom ye Doctor used to communicate affairs, and was then a Parliament man of much esteeme; to him the Dr., in a letter, discovers all, & showes him the hopeless posture of ye Duke; how much they both were disappointed in him; layes some directions what to doe, and urgeth activeness. This lrc, by a sad misfortune, was let fall by him that was intrusted to convey it, about Temple Barr, & handed from one to another, untill it came to Sr Henry Spillers; who, having viewed it, & pondred ye contents, concluded concluded it was a purchase that would ingratiate him to ye Duke, & so immediately presents it to him.

The Duke was troubled to read his faults & face so shrewdly intimated & prosaged; his temper was exceeding good, & he could mannage his affections many tymes with much serenity & moderation; but now he was quite off, & could not thinke of anythinge but a revenge. I have not knowne anythinge so trouble the Dr. as this did, that ye Duke should have his hand against him, & that he had involved so good a man to whom he wrote. But it pleased God to cut ye Duke out other worke; for ye cry of Rochel & ye Protestants of France was so exceeding great, & so much resented by the Parliament, that the Duke resolves to vindicate his honour by relieving them. So, whilst he was busy to get that fleet out & furnish forces for surprising the Isle of Rhees, he could not undertake take that worke of revenge against Dr. Preston.

But the Dr. thought he had not done enough unless he proclaymed in the pulpit what he had often told ye Duke in private, according to that comand of Christ, Mat. 6. 27. "What I tell you in darkness, that speake you in light, & what ye heare in ye eare, that preach on the howsetops;" as Chrysostom to his people, "cum verum singuli audire non vultis publice audietis." When the French match was concluded he preached ye sermon "of the Ground & Piller of truth," against ye mingling of religions, & mixing truth wth falsenhood, & shewed how impossible it was to mingle truth wth errour, or make up one religion of theirs & ours. For, should they leave but any tenent* of their Church, it would follow that ye Church in that before had erred, and so that Pillar would be overthrowne, on \( w^e \) hanged so many points of Popery. Neither could we \( w^e \) any one truth; for religion is of that brittle nature, breake it you may, bend it you cannot. It cannot be accomodated to respects of Policy, & interests of States & Kingdoms; but, as elements, when mingled in a compound body, doe loose their proper formes, so religions, when made ingredients & compounding pts of any other, doe lose their formes, & cease to be religions in God's account, 2 Kings 17. 33. 34. See "Pillar and Ground of Truth," Page 16.

When the Rochellers in distress layd their ruyne & disasters at our doores, & fathered their losses & calamityes on us, Dr. Preston preached that sermon of "the new life," where, Page 48, we have these wordes; "We cannot stand alone, what measure we mete to others in their distress men shall measure the same same to us in our necessity, Luke 6. 38. If any be an impediment, nay, if any does not their best, I pronounce this in the name of ye most high true God, that shall make it good sooner or later, that they & their howse shall perish," Esther 4. 14. The Court was hoodwinkt in all these cominations, for by "Church" they understood ye Prelates and their party! The King thought that if he adhered to them, & did his work, he was absolved; but those that have read ye commentaryes, that have since bin writ in red Letters, will have occasion to beleve the contrary.

When the Duke was in the Isle of Rhee, in wh voyadge he had engaged many of his very good friends, & much of ye Nobillity & gentry of the kingdom, the Doctor preached that sermon, called "ye demonstration of ye Diety," upon Isa. 64. 4. where, Page 81. 82, you have these wordes. "It is certeine evil is intended against us, & will come upon us, except except something be done to prevent it. For there is a covenant betwenee God & us, & breach of covenant causeth a quarrell; the quarrell of God shall not goe unre vengeance. He saith to the Isralits, Levit. 26. 25. "I will send a sword upon you that shall revenge the quarrell of my covenant. As if he should say, There is a covenant, and you have broake that covenant, & therefore I have a quarrell, & I will send a sword to avenge my quarrell. Now the quarrel's of God are not rash & passionate as men's are; and, therefore, he will not lay them aside without some true & real satisfaction."

"If we will not beleeve his word, yet shall we not beleeve his actions? Hath he not begun? Are we infatuated & see nothing? Doe we not see the whole body of those that profess the truth are besieged round about through Christendome? At this tyme, are not present enemyes not only stirred up but united together, together, & we disjoyned to resist them? Are not our allies wasted? Are not many branches of the Church cut off already, & more in hazard? In a word, have not our enterprizes bin blasted, & withered under our hands for the most pte? Have not thinges been long going downe the hill, & are now even hastning to a period? And doe not we say now that such an accident, and such a miscarriadge of such a business, & such men, are the causes? But, who is the cause of these causes? Is it not he without whose Providence a sparrow falls not to the ground? Are not these cracks to give warning before the fall of the howse? Are not these the grey hayres wch Hosea speakes of, that are heere & there upon us, and we discerne them not? Gray haires you know are a signe of old age & approach unto death.”

This sermon was preached to the King at Whitehall on the Lord's Day; and, on the the Wensday following, the newes came of the totall routing of our army in the Isle of Rhees; w\textsuperscript{th} was such a ratification of his prediction but the Sabbath day before, as made many beleeve he was a Prophet; and they called him Micaiah because he seldom prophesied good unto them. Dr. Neale, then Bishop of Winchester, said that he talked like one that was familliar w\textsuperscript{th} God Almighty; and they were the more affected w\textsuperscript{th} it because the Dr. had another course to preach before his month was out (for every chaplin was to preach twice, once upon y\textsuperscript{o} Lord's Day, and also upon the Tewsday).

The Dr. was desirous to exchange his course upon the Tuesday, for a sabbath day; so Dr. Potter preached on the Tewsday, & Dr. Preston was to preach on the Lord's day following. He was resolved to proceed on the same text, and to handle a point relating to the third third verse; for having shewed in the 4th verse that thinges were not done by chance, but by God, he now resolved for to show that God did all thinges that men doe not looke for. Wh being knowne amonge the Bps, and they af-frighted wth that disaster of ye Isle of Rheees, they interceded wth ye clerke of the closset, that seeing Dr. Preston's turne was past already, and this was Dr. Potter's, another might be put up and he deferred untill another tyme. This was yielded to, and, upon the Friday before, a messenger was sent unto the Dr. to tell him that another was pro-vided to preach for Dr. Potter, & he might spare his paines.

The Doct rated at the Providence; for he was resolved fully to have said in that sermon, if he had bin suffered, that which would in reason have deserved Micaiah's entereteynment, 1 Kings 22. 27. But God was mercifull to him, & used his enimyes enimyes as instruments to prevent y't danger.

It would have damped some men to have bin thus refused; he might have said w't him, Mat. 22. 4. "Behold I have prepared my dinner, my oxen & my fatlings are killed, & all things are ready;" but he considered what he had preached before, and that a sparrow fell not to the ground w'tout God's will; that his desire & resolution for to sacrifice his all was accepted, as Abraham's was; that his sermon, whilst in embryo & only in intention, had an efficacious operation upon the auditory; for, as they had shewed and discovered their feares, so good men did their joyes; & the sermon was more talked of at Court & in the citty than any sermon that ever he had preached before; for all men enquired what y's sermon was that Dr. Preston was not suffered to preach; and many wise men were pswaded that it did more good good then it would have done in case it had bin preached so that, instead of being damped & dejected at the affront, he was enlivened & encouraged.

I never knew him come home from the court more satisfied then he did this tyme, nor more encouraged in his ministry at Cambridge; for, he was then upon those sermons of the attributes of God that since were printed, and the Lord was greatly wth him in them.

Those Fellows at Emanuel, who had bin active in making of him Master there, were much satisfied, because the Doctor never would consent to the annulling of that statute, "De mora sociorum in Collegio;" for he was convinced that ye Founder had added it upon weighty grounds. He saw it was a meanes to make ye fellows preach, & looke abroad, & less intend the actings of the master; & that young schollars were heartned in their their studyes, wth hopes yt there would be preferments ready for them.

It was ordinary amonge the schollars to looke how long some fellows were to stay; therefore, observing these affronts at court, they petitioned the King that that statute might be abrogated. The Duke was glad upon this occasion to be revenged upon his old friend Dr. Preston, and did embrace it wth all alacrity. Commissioners were dispatch- ed for to heare & consider the allegations; and many meetings & debates were had about it. It was acknowledged that the statute was of equall power & vallidity wth the rest, though added three yeares after; and upon that, one of ye fellows that had petitioned fell off.

The Dr. used all his friends for to support & keepe in power this statute, & found very many very forward to assist assist him in it; but above all, a very noble grandchild of ye founder's, yet living, did much encourage and enable the defence; who, though a courtier & much obliged, yet did adventure and wave all his interests, rather than he would behold his grandfather's pious & prudent care so overthrowne. So a temper was at last agreed upon, that it should be suspended from effects in law, untill six Livings of a hundred pounds each £ annum should be annexed unto the college.

The soule is the undoubted soveraigne of ye body & hath therein an absolute & uncontrolled jurisdiction; and, in case of injury or overburdening, there is no action lics. But soules should consider, "soft & faire goes farr." "Qui vult regnare diu, languida regnat manu." It was Hobson, the carier, that told the scholars they would come time enough to London if they did not ride too fast.
It was incurable in this good man to override himselfe; for when the body is tyred we cannot take a new one at the next stage as we doe horses. But he thought all was one, some lived as much in seaven yeares as others did in seaventy, "Non diu vixit sed diu fuit" was his opinion of many men; he thought that our life is like iron that will consume wth rust as much as wth imployment.

These were his principles, and his actings were according; most unmercifull was he to his flesh of any living being, thinking that not tyme but action should be the metwand of all men's lives; "non annos meos, sed victorias numero." Not, how long I have lived, but how? God usually allows his dearest servants tyme to doe their worke in, Moses 120 yeares of age, Deut. 34. 7. David an old man before he dyes, 1 Cron. 29. 28. Paul, aged, Philemon 9. notwthstanding ing all his labours & activity. But yᵉ Dr. had a shorter period put unto his days. All men's is set, Job 7. 1. His was short. It was no disparagement to good Josiah to die about the Drⁿ's age, 2 Chron. 34. 1. Our glorious King Edward, that scarce outlived his minority, outstript, notwithstanding, all his longest living prædecessors in doing good. God, who had set his time, hastened his service; and so he did the Drⁿ; his preaching & studying labours were exceeding great; but that wᵉ spent & wore him was his cares & troubles for the Churche's safety & prosperity, & he would often inculcat upon 2 Cor. 11. 28. "That wᵉ cometh upon me daily, the care of all yᵉ churches."

When his body, therefore, began to be sick & languish he was content a little to abate, & take off, and thought a country howse in some good ayre might (as formerly it had done) advantage him.
him. He accordingly took one at Linton neere the hills, about 6 myles off, wch he furnished, & purposed to be in all the weeke, and retorne on Satur-dyes to preach on ye Lord's dayes; and, had this course bin taken tyme enough, much might have bin done.

But now he feared that sollicitude would be turned into sollitude, and the ayre of sutable converse he doubted would be wanting there; and being alone, he saw would too much gratify his melancholly. The spring then app-proaching, he was willing to consult wth some physicians; but London being farr off, he sent to Bury for Dr. Despotine. His present malady was want of rest, wch now tobacco would not help him to as formerly, and, there-fore, he proposed leting of blood. The Physician told him that it might phaps allay his heates & purchass sleepe, but, if he were wth in the verge of a consump-tion, tion, it would be fatal to him; notwithstanding which advise, ye deceitfull hopes of present case inticed him, & so was let blood. He never lived to repaire that loss, &, sinking more & more, he went to London, & tooke advise of those who were best acquainted wth his state of health; by their advise he retired a little into Newington, unto a loving friend of his that lived there, and then into Hertfordshire, a thinner & more peircing ayre.

The malady, they all agreed, was in his lunges, wch were not ulcerated neither, but obstructed & opprest wth stiff and clammy matter that he could not voyd; perspiration was that he wanted, and they supposed a penetrating ayre might doe ye cure; but that was found too searching & corrosive for the other ptres, wch were pervious enough and penetrable; he, therefore, thought upon Northamptonshire, his native country, wth would in reason be most propitious to him; & happen what might, he would leave his breath where first he found it, & thankfully returne what had bin serviceable now a long tyme to him.

He had at Preston, fower myles from Heyford, a very deare & bosome friend, that was ambitious of enterteyning good men, one Dr. Dod, & being seriously invited thither, he pitched upon it; there he enjoyed wth great contentment what ayre, converse wth friends, and loving enterteinment, could afford, and at the first was much refreshed by it; but, nature being spent, and no foundation left to worke upon, all his refreshing quickly flagged. He had be-fore made use of Dr. Ashworth, a man of much experience, who knew his body well, therefore, he thinkes of riding over unto Oxford to him, and there con-tinued about twelve days, & consulted with such as were there of any note.
Men die and prish when their tyme is come, as well "errore medici," as "vi morbi." Dr. Ashworth was pswaded that the scorbate was his disease & that ye London Drs. had all mistooke their marke, & therefore, pitched upon applications sutable; a great errour for so experienced & grave a Dr.

Desire of restitution into a state of healthe made shift to flatter Dr. Preston into a beleefe that the old man was right. Dr. Ashworth, upon his pswasion, comes over unto Preston w'th him, straines & steepes scurvy grass, & gives him drenches able to have weakened a stronger man then he was now; and having stayed & tampered w'th him about three weekes, & finding nothing answer his expectation, he takes his last leave of him, giving such order & directions as he thought good, and so left him & returned to Oxford, July 9. 1628.
When this dreame & fancy of ye scorbate failed, & Dr. Ashworth was gone, he resigned up himselfe to God alone, & let all care of physique and Drs. goe.

He had a servant who had bin laborious wth him, & whom he after used as a friend; he would say, "servi sunt humiles amici;" as was very true of him. To him he, therefore, now unbosomed himselfe, not only touching ye vanity and emptiness of all thinges heere below, but his owne beleefe & expectation of a sudence change; "not of my company," said he, "for I shall still converse wth God, & saints, but of my place & way of doing it."

His will was made some yeares before, as I have said; yet was it doubtfull, when it came to proving, but that it might be bafled & affronted. Therefore, he purposed to wave it, and make a deed of guift to him ye was in that will his executor, executor, with such restrictions & limitations as he thought good; all with he set downe with his owne hand; he also carefully provided for his mother during life, & both his brothers. His bookes & all his furniture & goods belonging to, and in his lodgings at, Emanuel College, he gave to one of his pupils that was fellow there, whom he always greatly favoured. Some exhibitions he gave to schollars there, to be disposed of from tyme to tyme by him that was executor. And, as he truly valued, so he highly rewarded his servant's faithfulness; who liveth yet in very good condition & reputation; of whom is verified what is said, Prov. 27. 18. "whoso keepeth ye figtree shall eate the fruit thereof, so he yt wayteth on his mast shall surely come to honour."

Having thus discumbred himselfe of worldly cares, he prayed for his college, that it might continue a flourishing nursery nursery of religion & learning; told those about him, as David before his death, 1 Cron. 29. 2. 3. &c., what he had done towards that goodly building since erected, & what care he had taken to get those Rectoryes in the King's Life mentioned (whereof I spake before); prayed God to furnish Lincoln's Inn from time to time with able preaching ministers, as also the Lecture-ship at Cambridge that had cost him so much trouble in ye procuring; and, for his sermons, he desired that they might not come into ye world like vagabonds, but, seeing the father lived not to see them settled & provided for, those would be carefull whom he named. In all with great thinges God hath answered him as I thinke no man was since Elisha, 2 Kings 2. 9. 10.

The night before he dyed, being Saturday, he went to bedd and lay about three howers desiring to sleepe, but but slept not; then, said he, "my desolution is at hand, let me goe to my home & Jesus Christ who hath bought me with his most precious blood," and so lay still, as in a slumber, till about two of the clock in the morning; then drinking, & resting on his servant's armes, he fell into a cold & clammy sweate, with he told them was the messenger of death, and so continued for about two howres very sylent; about fourer of the clock, he said, "I feele death coming to my heart, my paine shall now be quickly turned into joy;" and so his friends were called that were present in the howse, who spake unto him, but had no answer from him as they were used to have. They kneeled all downe & a Reverend Divine there present prayed. When prayer was ended Dr. Preston looked on them, &, turning away his head, gave up ye Ghost.

It was about 5 of ye clock on the Lord's Doct\textsuperscript{r} Preston.

Lord's day, but to him an everlasting Sabbath; he never, by his goodwill, rested that day from preaching since God was truly knowne unto him, untill now when God gave him an everlasting rest.

No man deserved better sollemnityes, but Mr. Dod was much against it; and his friends at Cambridge, who did highly honour him, and desired nothing more then to have wayted on his dust to his long home, were now obleiged to attend the election of another Master; but they durst not so much as make it knowne, or doe any thinge from w\textsuperscript{h} it might be gathered. He was buryed decently, but without state, in Fawley Church, in the county of Northampton. Old Mr. Dod, the minister of that place, preached, and a world of Godly people came together, July 20. 1628.

Just before his death he asked what day day it was, and being answered it was the Sabbath Day, "a fit day," said he, "to be sacrificed on. I have accompanied S' on earth & now I shall accompany angels in Heaven." Also Mrs. Chaderton reminding him of his preaching so profoundly on God's attributes he answered, "if it shall please God to prolong my life, I will make all so plaine, that every one shall be able to understand it."

He was within a little of one-and-forty years of age when he died.
